By the Associated Press.

Peiping, Aug. 10 (Tuesday).—Chinese sources reported today a Japanese army detachment had been wiped out in a battle with Chinese defenders of the Great Wall Pass at Nankow, 30 miles northeast of here.

Copyright, 1937, by the United Press.

Shanghai (Tuesday), Aug. 10.—Terror gripped Chinese here today as Japanese bluejackets landed under cover of darkness to reinforce the naval garrison following a shooting affray in which a Japanese naval officer, a sailor and a Chinese soldier were killed.

The Chinese feared repetition of the destruction of Chapei and other areas of the native city in the Shanghai war of 1932 during which thousands of Chinese and hundreds of Japanese were killed.

It was an incident similar to the shooting of last night which started the bloody Shanghai battle of five years ago.

Truck Driver Fires.

At dusk yesterday a truck carrying a group of Japanese from the permanent landing party attempted to enter the Hungjao military airdrome, the most important aviation center of the Chinese national government.

Chinese sentries of the local militia, the peace conservation corps, challenged the driver, who turned northward. At the same time the driver on the truck opened fire. Two Japanese jumped to the ground, apparently seeking cover, and the Chinese killed them. Both men were in uniform. Chinese authorities said one of their soldiers also was killed.

The Japanese version was that there were only two Japanese on the truck—the men killed—and that they were shot down while driving peaceably along one of the foreign-controlled roads leading into the concession, "where they had a perfect right to be."

Chinese Refuse to Withdraw.

The reinforced Japanese garrison demanded the Chinese peace preservation corps be withdrawn 12 miles from the city, in accord with the treaty signed between the two nations after the Shanghai war of 1932. The Chinese refused.

In Tokyo Lieut. Gen. Sugiyama, war minister, warned China Japan has exhausted her patience and is prepared for general military operations.

Forces of the central Chinese government and the Japanese regular army were engaged northwest and southwest of Peiping and south of Tientsin.

A Japanese mixed brigade attacked the Chinese eighty-ninth and 184th divisions along the Peiping-Suiyuan railway northwest of Peiping in front of the strategic Nankou Pass; Japanese cavalry sabered Chinese advance posts south of Tientsin along the Tientsin-Pukow railway, and Japanese airplanes bombed and machine gunned huge concentrations of the Chinese central government around Paotingfu, south of Peiping on the Peiping-Hankow railway.

Soviet Acts to Save Siberian Quadruplets

Moscow, Aug. 9 (AP).—Dispatches from desolate Sakhalin, Russia's subarctic island off the Siberian coast, said today the Soviet government had intervened to save the lives of girl quadruplets born to the wife of a worker in the Yashin fields.

The babies were born prematurely, last May in the village of Katangli, and Soviet health authorities, following Canada's example in the case of the Dionnes, immediately took charge. Powdered milk was rushed by airplane from Alexandrovsk, on the Siberian mainland. A physician and nurse were appointed to care for mother and babies, all of whom survived.

Heroin valued at $150,000 was seized aboard the liner Manhattan in the New York harbor yesterday by United States customs inspectors, the Treasury Department reported last night.

The heroin package taken weighed 22 pounds and is one of the biggest seizures made since the Treasury concentrated on its present narcotic drive.

Officials said the package was concealed in a stateroom on the luxurious liner and had made several trips across the Atlantic, with the steward unable to move it because of close surveillance on both sides of the ocean.

The steward, whose name is Johann Murken, has figured in other narcotic mixups both in this country and Europe. He was held in Hamburg, Germany, several months ago when Robert Hoag, internationally known dope smuggler, was arrested on information supplied by the Treasury.

Bride, 9, Whipped In School, Waives Right to 'Larnin'

Sneedsville, Tenn., Aug. 9 (U.P.).—Eunice Winstead Johns, 9-year-old bride of six months, stayed at home and dipped snuff today and allowed "I ain't gonna git no edication."

"I ain't gonna let no man whip me," the girl bride, who startled the Nation with her marriage last January, said.

The man who did whip her was Wade Ferguson, country school teacher of this remote community.

Ferguson revealed Eunice came to school for two days but was so "mischievous" he had to switch her. Then she quit and wouldn't return.

W. A. Bass, education commissioner, said "we will not take any action to compel a married child to attend school."

2 Are Prostrated As Mercury Soars To a High of 91

Two heat prostrations were reported in the District yesterday as the mercury soared to a high of 91 at 4 p. m.

The first victim, unidentified at first, later gave his name as Andre Kebert, 60, no address. He was picked up at Third and D streets southwest, after he had collapsed, and was taken to Casualty Hospital.

The second victim, a colored man, has not been identified. He was found unconscious at Seventh street and New York avenue northwest, and also taken to the same hospital, where his condition was declared serious.

Yesterday's low was reached at 4 a. m. when the mercury dropped to 69. At 7 last night, however, the temperature recorded 86 with little possibility of relief for today. Continued warm weather with possible showers was the Weather Bureau's prediction for today.

100 Oil Men Lost As Work Ship Sinks In Venezuela Lake

Maracaibo, Venezuela, Aug. 9 (U.P.).—At least 100 persons were believed drowned today when the launch Anna Cecilia sank in Lake Maracaibo with 200 petroleum workers aboard. The men were being returned to oil fields after spending the week-end in Maracaibo.

Several bodies were recovered and authorities pressed a search for additional victims. Three days of mourning were proclaimed by many labor organizations here and radio stations suspended all broadcasts except for bulletins about the disaster.

Drive Opens For Federal Cotton Loan

Outlook for Biggest Yield in 10 Years Adds Impetus.

Senate Group Agrees to Rush Legislation Next Session.

An Agriculture Department forecast of the largest cotton crop in six years yesterday brought renewed Congressional pressure for supporting cotton loans, and a pledge of crop control action the first week of the next session of Congress.

By a unanimous vote, the Senate Agriculture Committee agreed to place general farm legislation before the Senate within a week after Congress meets again, whether in special or extra session.

Southern commissioners of agriculture met with the Senate committee and recommended that Congress agree by caucus to make farm control legislation the first order of business when Congress meets again in January.

The Agriculture commissioners also recommended legislation assuring loans on the basis of 10 cents a pound, if cotton should decline below 10 cents, with provision that parity subsequently be paid farmers who co-operate in next year's control plans.

The Government cotton crop forecast brought reiteration of demands by Chairman Ellison D. Smith, of the Senate Agriculture Committee, that Federal loans be made by existing agencies to stabilize cotton prices and keep the excess crop off the market.

Cotton Futures Sag.

The President declared he will not approve Federal loans to support the prices of cotton or other major crops until assured of action on the Administration's production control bill.

The Agriculture Department's crop reporting board yesterday forecast a cotton harvest of 15,593,000 bales, an increase of 3,194,118 over last year. New York cotton futures broke as much as $2.30 a bale. December cotton closed in New York at 10.37 cents a pound. Expected early action on loan relief was said to have checked a sharper decline.

Senator Smith, whose agriculture committee has held up the Administration's farm control program pending a summer study by a special committee, declared the Government forecast was "too high" by possibly "a million or a million-and-a-quarter bales."

Known as "Cotton Ed" because of his absorbing interest in cotton, Smith insisted the board had not made sufficient allowance for the destructive proclivities of the boll weevil. He said too much stress had been given the number of growing bolls, which in a year of moisture, "doesn't mean a thing."

Calls Facilities Ample.

Smith reiterated that through the Commodity Credit Corporation and the RFC "we've got all of the facilities in the world to meet the situation."

"If they will only stop raw hiding us and make loans where they are needed, that is all the farmers ask," declared Smith. "They can't affect this year's crop by passing control legislation, because the crop's already made."

Smith and other Southern Senators were hopeful their agreement to report control legislation the first week in January will be regarded by the President as sufficient assurance to go ahead with cotton loans.

Quints Catch Cold; Visitors Barred by Dr. Dafoe's Orders

Callander, Ontario, Aug. 9 (U.P.).—All five of Canada's world-famous Dionne quintuplets were confined to their nursery tonight with head colds, caught while they were out in a drenching rain yesterday.

Dr. Allan Roy Dafoe, the quintuplets' physician, barred visitors from the nursery grounds and canceled personal appearances of the children.

Dr. Dafoe said the babies also had sore throats. Emilie, middleweight of the quintuplets, suffered a slight throat infection last week and was isolated for five days in the nursery hospital.

American Warcraft Will Remain Near China War Zone.

Act Indicates Hope For Peace Is Gone

Squadron Must Be Ready to Move Civilians Near Peiping.

By William V. Nessly.

Administration concern over the Sino-Japanese hostilities in North China was reflected yesterday when the Navy Department announced indefinite postponement of a proposed visit to Japan by a portion of the United States Asiatic fleet, now in Chinese waters.

The fleet's flagship, the cruiser Augusta, and four destroyers had been scheduled for a courtesy visit to Japanese ports in September and October. The Navy Department announcement gave no reason for the postponement, but officials said it was the desire to keep the craft near the scene of hostilities for protection of American nationals and property.

Though the visit to Japan was not to take place for some weeks it was pointed out it is impossible to change plans on short notice. Official reception plans, need for providing supplies and diplomatic custom in general require considerable advance notice of any such change or delay.

At the same time, the indefinite postponement coming now indicated to some that little hope is held for an early end of the strife centering in the Peiping and Tientsin areas.

The Augusta is the flagship of Admiral Harry E. Yarnell, commander of the Asiatic Fleet, and is at Tsingtao, China. The destroyers are at Chefoo, China.

Hundreds of Americans are in the danger zone, at Peiping and Tientsin. In addition, there are the Marine embassy guard, about 500 men, at Peiping, 1,000 Marines at Shanghai and about 650 soldiers at Tientsin. Consideration of the civilians' plight and the threat to their safety has occupied the attention of both President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull for several weeks.

The President has conditioned his recent brief trips on the situation in China, and on one occasion called off his week-end river cruise in order to be close at hand as reports came in from the United States' diplomatic and consular officials in China.

Asked at his press conference yesterday whether postponement of the ships' visit to Japan meant there were new developments in the long-made plans for evacuation of menaced Americans, if necessary, Secretary Hull said there was nothing new on the evacuation phase of the situation.

Can Carry 2,000 Refugees.

Meanwhile, officials scanned the American naval strength in Chinese waters, confident sufficient vessels are available to take out all of this country's civilian nationals in North China, if the Americans could reach the sea.

Naval craft there have a capacity of about 2,000 refugees, it was said.

There are three large gunboats, the Tulsa, the Sacramento and the Asheville, with the yacht Isabel, ranking in size about with the gunboats.

There are 13 destroyers, three divisions of four ships each and the squadron leader, the U. S. S. Jones. The ship Blackhawk is the tender for the destroyers, all of which are at Chefoo, except the Barker, at Tsinfitao, and the Perry, at Cavite, Philippine Islands for overhauling.

In addition, five river gunboats are on the Yangtze, constituting the Yangtze patrol, and one such craft in South China.

Also present are six submarines, though they are not available for evacuation purposes.

All of the naval craft combined carry about 4,200 men.

Tremendous congestion was reported yesterday at Tientsin, on the Peiho River, due to the influx of Japanese troops into North China through that city. All means of communications between Tientsin and Peiping, some 90 miles, are reported swamped.

Liquor Sale At Bar Up in House Today

Bill to Broaden D. C. Rules Blocked When Near Passage.

Mississippian Gets Delay; Other Local Acts Handled.

By Edward T. Folliard

As soon as it meets today, the House will vote on a bill to permit Washington bartenders to serve drinks of hard liquor across the lunch counter. At present only wine and beer may thus be served. Whisky must be served at a table.

The House was on the verge of passing the bill yesterday when a parliamentary maneuver by Representative Ross Collins (Democrat), of Mississippi, delayed a vote to this afternoon.

The wet-dry battle precipitated by the legislation was reminiscent of prohibition days. Chairman Palmisano, of the House District Committee, argued that the direct bartender-to-consumer system would benefit the working man, saving him tips he now gives a waitress.

Representative Rich (Republican), of Pennsylvania, retorted that it was simply a way of helping the working man to spend his money.

64 to 56 for Bill.

Several other members, not so serious, agreed that a man could get just as drunk while drinking at a table as while hoisting them from a bar.

The 120 members who were in the House yesterday when the liquor bill came up voted indirectly 64 to 56 in favor of the lunch counter provision. In a minute or so, the bill would have been passed. But Representative Collins, having been whipped in his attempts to torpedo the legislation with amendments, then made a motion to send the bill back to the District committee for changes. He also made a motion of no quorum.

Speaker Bankhead, anxious to have the House adjourn out of respect to the late Representative Peyser, asked Collins to postpone a vote on the motion to recommit until today, promising action at the outset of today's session.

The bill under consideration was in the form of an amendment to the District alcoholic beverage control act. It would give the District Court, rather than the Commissioners, authority to review decisions by the Alcohol Beverage Control Board revoking or suspending licenses. It would permit the serving of hard liquor over lunch counters, and it would stop the flow of tax-free liquor from New York to individuals in this city.

Position Afterward Vital.

Collins offered amendments to kill the first two reforms. The first one was voted down an aye and nay vote, and the one on the lunch counter provision by a 64-56 vote.

Discussing the lunch counter provision, Representative Mason (Republican), Illinois, said it didn't make much difference whether a man was sitting down or standing up when he was drinking.

"What counts," he said, "is the position he's in after he has finished drinking."

Representative Palmisano, who used to be a bartender himself in Baltimore while studying law, contended that the man behind the

Child, 6, Is Killed By Car, 67th Victim In City This Year

A 6-year-old boy, struck when he ran from behind a parked car in front of 4130 Military road, died last night in Georgetown Hospital. He was Washington's sixty-seventh traffic victim this year.

Albert A. Tully, 5341 Forty-second street northwest, was the victim. Police said he was struck by a car operated by Spencer B. Lee, 19, of Seven Locks road, Cabin John, Md. Lee is being held for action by the coroner's jury, after originally being charged with reckless driving.

The sixty-sixth traffic victim was Mrs. Adie W. Thorne, 73, who died at Emergency Hospital January 8 from injuries which, the coroner determined Saturday, were suffered when she was struck by an automobile allegedly bearing diplomatic tags.

Coffin Becomes Cradle for Baby Back From Death

Morristown, Tenn., Aug. 9 (U.P.).—Charlie Cochran tonight began converting a coffin into a cradle for a blue-eyed baby girl who came back from "death."

Mrs. Cochran and the baby were "doing well," doctors at the hospital here said, although 24 hours ago both mother and father had mourned the death of the day-old daughter.

The baby was born Sunday night and pronounced dead at birth. A friend of the family placed the child in a pasteboard box and brought the tiny body to Cochran at his home at Newmarket. The father placed the box in a smokehouse.

Unable to find a coffin small enough for the tiny body, Cochran began building one himself. He decided to take measurements of the child.

Going to the smokehouse, he opened the cardboard box. The baby was crying. Cochran rushed the child back to the hospital. Physicians said the tiny girl probably will live.

Cigarette Girl Joins Va. Circus; 'Better Than River,' Says Father

The Doris (Billie) Major mystery was cleared up yesterday when the missing 27-year-old cigarette girl was found among the equestrienne ensemble in a circus at Norfolk.

"It's better than the river," was the philosophical comment last night of Doris' father, Malcolm G. Major, after he had identified the Billie Sergeant in the Hagenbeck-Wallace troupe.

Missing for eight days, she was believed at first to have drowned in the Potomac. A note she left for a girl friend a week ago Sunday explained she was "going up the river for a swim" because her "thinking machine" wasn't working.

This and other theories as to her disappearance were disproved yesterday when her father, who flew to Norfolk to investigate a new tip, recognized her riding a pony in the show. She told him tearfully of her desire to continue with the circus, and won his consent.

It was her popularity with Shoreham Hotel patrons which gave her away. Everyone who saw her there remembered her pleasant personality, her good looks and particularly her walk.

She was identified in her new role Sunday by Melvin D. Hildreth and other members of the Circus Fans Association, then in convention at Norfolk. The association and the circus troupe were cruising about Chesapeake Bay on the steamer Robert E. Lee. The attractive blonde drew the attention of Washingtonians who had seen her many times at the hotel.

Her costume was the same as

Says President Wrecks Party Harmony

Offers Amendment To Bar Third Term

Charge President Plays Politics Is Denied by McIntyre.

By Robert C. Albright.

Burning Administration bridges behind him, Senator Royal S. Copeland, of New York, yesterday lashed out at President Roosevelt as a "destroyer" of Democratic harmony whose "political popularity" is on the downgrade.

Aroused at reports of Hyde Park conferences with Bronx Leader Edward J. Flynn, sponsoring a Copeland rival in the New York mayoralty contest, the New York Senator scoffed at White House denials of "politics" in the Flynn visit.

In the space of three hours, Copeland issued a public statement attacking the President, interviewed the press, and proposed in the Senate a Constitutional amendment to bar Mr. Roosevelt or any other President from a third term in office.

"Wholly Social Visit."

At Hyde Park, Marvin H. McIntyre, secretary to the President, declared Flynn was merely one of several guests at a "wholly social party." McIntyre said no political subjects were discussed, and the President is not taking any part in the New York contest.

Informed of the Hyde Park statement, Copeland told reporters it did not change his comment on the President in the slightest.

Sees Popularity Waning.

Long at odds with the Administration, Copeland broke sharply yesterday following published reports of the Flynn conference. He said it was no secret the President will take reprisals against every Senator who had the temerity to oppose his will on the court measure.

"I am not afraid of Mr. Roosevelt's reprisals," the Senator told newsmen. "The President enjoys a great personal popularity, but his political popularity is swiftly disappearing."

In a prepared statement, Copeland said "the President himself does more in five minutes to destroy Democratic harmony than can be reestablished in a generation by Jefferson Island picnics and peace dinners."

Copeland's deliberate break came at a moment of serious Democratic Senate cleavages following the court bill rift. It came on the eve of a Democratic Senatorial "harmony" dinner designed to heal party wounds.

The peace rally will be held at the Raleigh Hotel tonight, and Copeland told reporters he will "be there." Senator Josh Lee, of Oklahoma, secretary of the committee in charge of dinner arrangements, said 65 Democratic Senators had accepted invitations, and all will be present except those who are ill or out of the city.

President Roosevelt, returning today after three days at Hyde Park, will either "look in" on the "harmony" dinner, or send the Senators a message.

McIntyre Explains.

Before swinging into his barbed attack on the President, Copeland referred to one press dispatch quoting Flynn, after leaving the President, as saying: "It's Mahoney all the way."

"Franklin D. Roosevelt is not a voter in New York City," said Copeland. "We are not interested in what his private views may be. But why should President Roosevelt try

Reich Banishes London Times Correspondent

By the Associated Press.

London, Aug. 9.—Germany protested today against Great Britain's expulsion of three German newspaper correspondents, and retaliated by ordering a prominent British news writer to leave Germany within two weeks.

Norman Ebbutt, Berlin correspondent of the London Times for about 15 years, was ordered to leave. Since the Nazi regime came to power in Germany his articles have been widely quoted.

Through the British foreign office the Times was informed the German government wanted a Times correspondent in Berlin "who will pay less attention to work considered here as trivialities and more attention to what is important."

An authoritative source indicated the German action would not alter the refusal of the British home office, announced last week, to renew labor permits of three German correspondents, two of whom already have left England.

A spokesman for the Times said:

"We are not going to send a man to Berlin at dictation of the Nazis. Unless the Germans suffer an attack of sense within the next few days and keep Ebbutt, we shall leave the Berlin post vacant."

The British government offered no explanation. The conservative Evening Standard in an editorial, asking official light on the affair, said:

"If the men have been guilty of espionage it is better that the public should be told so than that the present atmosphere of uneasy speculation should exist."

May Drop Niemoeller Trial.

Berlin, Aug. 9 (AP).—Indications tonight were that some Nazi quarters desired to drop trial proceedings against the Rev. Martin Niemoeller, Protestant leader in the fight against government regulation of church affairs.

An end to the affair was understood to be desired because of last night's demonstration parade by members of Niemoeller's congregation, irked by a ban on a public prayer meeting planned on his behalf.

Another possible factor was the recent acquittal of the Rev. Otto Dibelius, another prominent Protestant who was tried for an old open letter upholding that Christ was a Jew.

By the Associated Press.

Hendaye, Franco-Spanish Frontier, Aug. 9.—Government labor battalions rushed to the Teruel front in northeast Spain tonight to throw fortifications across the path of the insurgents' steadily lengthening salient.

The town of Canete, which straddles the Cuenca-Teruel highway, apparently was to be transformed into a fortress for a stand in defense of the vital government communications between Madrid and Valencia on the east coast.

Canete is about 40 miles on a direct line southwest of Toril, southernmost tip of the insurgents' finger-like salient. It is on a main highway east of Cuenca and southwest of Teruel.

Other Places Fortified.

Although insurgent quarters expected the government to mass its defense forces there, the government also fortified positions closer to Toril and in the Valdemeca mountain passes northeast of Cuenca, capital of Cuenca Province.

Insurgent field headquarters on the Teruel front said their observation planes sighted a column of government troops and a long line of sandbag-laden trucks moving up from Cuenca to Canete.

The same sources said they had intercepted a government radio broadcast ordering "all able-bodied men in Cuenca Province" to Canete to build barricades in its streets and to encircle it with trenches.

See Province Abandoned.

Insurgent officers said the government's strategy appeared to be to abandon Cuenca Province south to Canete rather than risk a decisive battle without ample preparation. They said the government evidently has relinquished its "only logical defense" for Cuenca Province—the chain of rugged mountains in the Spanish badlands north and east of Salvacanete.

A terrific land and air bombardment in northwest Spain opened what insurgent officers called "the final offensive" against Santander and Asturias Provinces, the government's last territory on the Biscayan coast.

'Shock' for Dementia Praecox To Be Tried at St. Elizabeths

The insulin, or "shock," treatment for dementia praecox, one of the most unusual forms of therapy known to medical science, will be instituted at St. Elizabeths Hospital within a fortnight, The Post learned yesterday.

With officials hopeful that the bizarre treatment, in which the patient is placed in a coma, will restore to society up to 40 per cent of the 3,000 dementia praecox sufferers in the institution, the "shock" course will be under supervision of Dr. Alexander Simon, of the hospital staff.

Dr. Simon has just returned after several weeks in New York, where he made a thorough study of the treatment at Bellvue Hospital.

About all doctors know concerning the new treatment is that it works. It was discovered accidentally in 1932 by Dr. Manfred Sakel of Vienna, who was using insulin as a sedative for morphine addicts. He noticed that a slight overdose of the substance caused his patients to improve, and subsequently experimented with dementia praecox victims. Of those who had been ill less than six months, 80 per cent recovered.

Dr. Sakel came to the United States last year. Since his visit, his method has been adopted by hospitals in all parts of the country.

Twelve patients, six men and six

Favorable Rule Predicted for Wage-Hour Bill

By Sidney Olson.

Blocked, delayed and amended countless times, the much-mutilated wages-hours bill limped slowly yesterday toward its next high hurdle—the Wednesday session of the House Rules Committee, with 6 of the 14 committee members in league to keep it there until the session ends.

The bill will get a favorable rule, several committee members predicted last night, however, despite the "pocket veto" vow of the six Southerners on the committee, and more significantly despite what one member called "the lack of pressure from House leaders to give it a rule."

The House Labor Committee's favorable report on the wages-hours measure, signed by Chairman Mary T. Norton (Democrat), of New Jersey, appeared yesterday.

The report struck a new note in giving numerous assurances to business. It stressed that while there may be some temporary financial losses and certain inconveniences to some employers, it will cure many "injustices."

Southern Member Defiant.

The Rules Committee has shown no haste in meeting to give the bill a "green light" so that it can reach the floor, where passage, possibly with further amendment, is believed certain.

One Rules Committee member, outspoken Representative Eugene E. Cox (Democrat), of Georgia, a slashing critic of the C. I. O., said again yesterday: "They won't get the bill out of our committee. The only way they can blast it out is by a caucus of the majority, and that would require 30 days before action. Besides, I wouldn't be bound by any caucus. I'm not trying to serve the political leaders of the Democratic Party."

Cox several days ago reportedly tried to bet $50 the bill would never get through the committee to the floor. There were plenty of takers, but a leader said yesterday that the wager had been withdrawn "by request."

New Deal Backers Irked.

Administration supporters in the House in several instances yesterday expressed indignation at the House leaders—and they specifically mentioned Speaker William B. Bankhead and Floor Leader Sam Rayburn of Texas—had not urged the Rules Committee to expedite action on the controversial bill. This impression was so widespread that several Southern members said they were "delighted" at the apparent lack of pressure by the leaders on the rules group.

The truth of this charge was difficult to ascertain, as Rayburn, although a Texan and possibly against the bill for sectional reasons, has consistently appeared to be a backer of the measure. Interviewed yesterday, he said he had not polled the committee, and was unable to prophesy the outcome, but believed a rule should be granted soon, with House passage to follow shortly. Bankhead has made no statement for or against the bill.

Mrs. Norton last night struck the same note she did in the report, in a radio broadcast, when she reassured business that the bill struck only at "chiselers," that business men and labor need not fear they would have to travel constantly to Washington "to protect their rights," and that "the high-type American business man whose wages and hours are in line with the thought of the President on this social principle need not fear" Government interference.

Blow at South Charged.

Mrs. Norton stressed the numerous committee amendments of the House as tending to protect the rights of collective bargaining in the bill. She concluded with the statement to employers, "Do not let propaganda against this bill, led by a few selfish people, scare you. This bill is not Fascistic, Communistic, autocratic or bureaucratic. It is merely a sincere effort to increase buying power, to spread happiness and prosperity to the average American citizen in the most equitable manner possible."

Representative Cox meanwhile released a letter from Dr. Charles F. Roos, former research director of NRA, in which Roos warned the wage-hour bill will "level down present wage scales," would make the "South bear the brunt of this measure" and would "decrease present production and living standards."

Guilty Plea by Wire Brings Stiff Sentence

St. Louis, Aug. 9 (AP).—A merchant thought up a new one today to try in police court—pleading guilty by telegraph—but it didn't work with the judge.

William B. Temm, charged on two driving counts, wired the court he was unavoidably detained in Kansas City and would return to the city tomorrow. At that time he'll find his driver's license has been revoked, he has been sentenced to 10 days in the workhouse and assessed $225 in fines.

Anti-Lynching Bill Should Be Considered By Senate Before Adjournment.

By Franklyn Waltman

Now that the Senate has showed such speed in clearing its calendar of the Administration's "must" legislation, there is opportunity for that body this week while waiting for bills from committee and conference reports to take action on a really worthwhile measure.

WALTMAN.

This particular measure has the support of President Roosevelt and it is a little difficult to understand why is not on his "must" list. It has the support of approximately 70 per cent of the people of this country, according to a Gallup poll. Actually it has received the support of 71 per cent of the House membership on a roll call in that body in April. The Senate Judiciary Committee in June voted 13 to 3 in favor of this measure.

And yet this piece of legislation has been on the Senate calendar for almost two months without any action on it. But that is not surprising when one considers that the leadership of the Senate comes from the South—for, we make bold to say, this measure is the Wagner-Van Nuys-Gavagan anti-lynching bill.

It would be indefensible for the Senate to adjourn without a serious attempt to pass anti-lynching legislation. The only excuse made for not bringing the matter before the Senate—where there is reported to be an overwhelming majority in favor of it—is that it would occasion a filibuster. But that is no excuse at all. If a small handful of Senators is to be able to frighten the Congress away from passing legislation inspired by a sense of decency and morality, then the Senate might as well close its doors.

If a small group of Southern Senators wish to thwart majority rule by filibustering this bill to death, they should have the opportunity to do so. Nothing would be lost through an immediate attempt to pass this bill. The Senate has little of importance to do this week—nothing, if you please, as important as this bill.

Instead of adjourning early to play golf or attend baseball games, the Senate might well spend the remainder of this week, at least, in an effort to get action on the anti-lynching bill—and if the effort fails, we will know those responsible, and certain people masquerading as liberals will have the masks torn from their faces.

There is great objection to rushing legislation to passage in the heat of the summer, at the tag end of a grinding legislative session. But such an objection cannot be applied to this legislation. Federal steps to prevent lynching and, in the event of failure, to punish those guilty, have been debated in this country since 1922.

It has received intensive consideration for the last three years. Not only in the North but throughout the South tens of thousands of thoughtful men and women have studied this subject and have gone on record in favor of Federal legislation. Indeed, some of the very best research work on lynchings in this country has been done by organizations and men and women in Southern States. Agitation for such legislation has come in large part from the best of the Southern press.

Neither is the passage of such a bill an insult to the South nor is it a force bill. The decent men and women of the South want such legislation, as demonstrated by the attitude of the Southern press, by the action of Southern organizations and by the recent Gallup poll, which showed that 65 per cent of the sentiment in the South—compared to 70 per cent the Nation over—favored a Federal anti-lynching bill.

It is a peculiar thing that certain gentlemen from the South on Capitol Hill howl about State rights only when it is proposed to take effective steps to stop the lynching of colored men. They forget about State rights when they propose to have the Federal Government tell an employer what wages he may pay and that he must go to jail if he lets any of his employes work longer than a certain number of hours.

They make a mockery of State rights when they propose legislation penalizing a cotton farmer if he grows more cotton than a bureaucrat in Washington decrees. Oh, it is all right, good and noble, for the Federal Government to do these things. But, say they, it would dishonor the sacred memory of Thomas Jefferson for the Federal Government to take steps to save a poor colored man's life.

And, passage of this legislation may now be the means of saving the lives of a few colored men between now and next winter. And, let it ever be remembered, that close to 200 persons—including 25 who were white—have been lynched in this country for crimes of which it subsequently was proved they were innocent. But, guilty or innocent, every person in this country is entitled to his day in court and to be protected from blood-thirsty, frenzied mobs. That is the primary guarantee of the Constitution and until that guarantee becomes a reality, nothing else is of very much importance.

House Vote Set On Liquor Sale At Bars Today

counter was better able to judge a customer's drinking if the customer were in front of him. He said the legislation under consideration was another step in removing camouflage from drinking in Washington. An earlier step, he recalled, was the abolition of the "hidden bar."

"I hope the day will come," he said, "when the whole thing will be brought into the open."

Representative John J. Cochran (Democrat), of St. Louis, who was a pioneer in the fight against prohibition, expressed his alarm over the way women were drinking today.

"In what city, before prohibition," he asked, "could you and women going into public places as they are today."

Dry Law Might Return.

Palmisano replied that heavy drinking on the part of women was the evil fruit of prohibition, when they learned to drink in speakeasies.

Cochran warned, however, that prohibition would come back unless some way is found to protect the country's youth from liquor. Under the guise of "taverns," he said, there are now 25 times as many saloons as before prohibition.

Representative Reese (Republican), of Kansas, said that there was no sentiment for the lunch-counter provision except that which came from the bartenders. No parent-teacher associations had asked for it, he said, and there was no real public demand for it.

Representative Rich, aroused by the granting of liquor licenses to establishments near the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, offered an amendment under which the A. B. C. board would sound out sentiment within an area of 1,500 feet of a church or school before granting a license.

Representative Dorksen (Republican), of Illinois, opposed the amendment. He recalled that Abraham Lincoln had worshiped in the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, but he pointed out that this church is in the heart of the business district, and that the A. B. C. Board had to use some judgment in granting liquor licenses.

"Which is the most important," Rich asked, "the church in which Abraham Lincoln worshiped, or a booze store?"

"People go to church on Sunday," answered Dirksen, "and on that day stores that sell liquor are closed. That's your answer."

Rich's amendment was defeated.

Before taking up the liquor bill, the House passed a bill to reform the procedure whereby babies are adopted in the District. The Senate already had passed the measure. Since the House made two minor amendments, however, it now goes to a Senate-House conference.

No action was taken on a bill to create a board to regulate barbers here, so the measure probably will be allowed to sleep until the January session. No more District days are likely to come in the House at this session.

The baby adoption bill, substitute for a law enacted in 1895, provides for an investigation by social workers of both the adoptive parents and the child; dispenses with the consent of parents personally deprived of the custody of their child, or who cannot be located after notice by the court; requires a six-month trial period before the final decree of adoption shall be entered, and gives the child the rights of inheritance and succession.

Sugar Bill Foes Win Promise of Revision Steps

Unrelenting opposition of three Government departments to the proposed sugar legislation before Congress appeared last night to be making itself felt.

Following receipt of two more letters from Secretary of State Hull, urging revision of the proposed legislation, and with the threat of a Presidential veto hanging over the bill passed by the House, Chairman Pat Harrison (Democrat), Mississippi, of the Senate Finance Committee said he would "go over the whole situation" with President Roosevelt today before the committee sets about revamping the measure.

The Administration has protested steadily against the intended restriction on refining in Hawaii, Puerto Rico and Cuba as unfair to those areas and. Secretary Hull wrote, encouraging formation of a sugar monopoly in this country.

Senator Harrison is prepared to discuss with the President a suggestion that legislation "freeze" both the insular and continental output at approximately the present proportions. He expressed the view that this step would answer the charge of discrimination against offshore producers.

Both he and Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), Wyoming, predicted a "satisfactory compromise would be worked out."

Hull Scores Protection.

Meanwhile, the Senate Finance Committee heard witnesses uphold and attack the provisions at issue.

P. A. Staples, president of the Hershey Corporation, declared that what was intended as "purely agricultural legislation has been distorted" to benefit the "sugar trust." Saying his corporation had a $40,000,000 investment in the Cuban industry, he urged that all refining provisions be removed from the legislation.

In his attack on the "sugar trust," Staples took a line similar to that of Secretary Hull, who wrote:

"It is believed to be against the public interest for the Government to grant any further measure of protection to a group whose record repeatedly indicates that it would resort to monopolistic practices and conspire to restrain trade in violation of the antitrust laws.

Both the Interior and Agriculture departments have criticized the legislation.

Labor Man for Bill.

However, Harold J. Burke, representing the Sugar Workers Conference, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor, urged the committee yesterday to retain the refinery clauses, contending that their removal would result in ripping out the $25,000,000 pay roll of refineries in this country. He said United States refinery workers were paid $5 to $17 a day, while sugar workers in Hawaii average only $10.92 a week and those in Puerto Rico even less.

Ellsworth Bunker, chairman of the United States Cane Sugar Refiners Association, also spoke for the restriction on insular refining. He said the quota system under the Jones-Costigan act, which would be extended under the new legislation, limited operations of the continental plants to 62 per cent of their capacity and held that removal of the proposed limitation would cut operations to 45 per cent of capacity, spelling "ruin."

Charles M. Kearney, president of the National Beet Growers Association, declared Western beet producers are facing an "emergency" because of the ending of the AAA benefit payments.

Hyde Park, N. Y., Aug. 9 (AP).—Summer White House officials said today President Roosevelt would "act" on the $130,000,000 Interior Department appropriation bill before midnight, but announcement of a signature or veto probably would be withheld until his arrival in Washington tomorrow.

Koppers Rules Railroad in Va., Wheeler Says

Senator Charges Connection Is Against Spirit of Law.

By the Associated Press.

A charge that Koppers United Co., mammoth coal corporation, "violated the spirit of the law" in its relationship with the Virginian Railroad brought a quick denial yesterday at the Senate's rail inquiry.

Chairman Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, who made the charge, produced records to show that Koppers interests are part owners and best customers of the railroad. Declaring that $2.50 is the approximate freight on a ton of coal from West Virginia to Tidewater points, he said that of each $2.50 paid to the railroad for carrying coal, 67 cents would go to Koppers subsidiaries as dividends.

These dividends, Wheeler declared, "amounted to rebates," and were "in effect a tribute exacted by Koppers for the privilege of their business." He cited statutes prohibiting special freight rebates.

Company officials disagreed. T. J. Michie, jr., assistant secretary of Koppers, and J. P. Williams, jr., vice president, declared the dividends were neither "rebates" nor "tribute" but return on an investment.

Bought Common Stock.

Koppers mines had for many years shipped coal from West Virginia to Colonial Virginia over the Virginian Railway as well as the Chesapeake & Ohio and Norfolk & Western.

Each of the coal subsidiaries purchased 19,536 shares of Virginia Corporation common stock at $1 a share in January of this year. Although they hold two-thirds of the common stock between them, Williams explained, the two Koppers companies have but 40 per cent of the voting power of the railroad corporation.

Wheeler asserted, however, the Koppers interests would be able to "dictate" policies because of their position as principal customer of the railroad. Williams agreed Koppers would be able to "use its influence" to obtain "fair" policy on common stock dividends.

Earnings Big in 1937.

"You had the power of economic life or death over the railroad," Wheeler declared, "because you could take away your business and give it to another line."

Michie protested that if Koppers mines shipped coal over other roads, taking the business from the Virginian, "we would ruin our investment" in the railroad.

Wheeler said the railroad, "one of the most consistent" moneymakers of recent years, had earnings during the first four months of this year at a rate which would make possible a $60.40 dividend on common stock if maintained throughout the year.

Williams and Michie protested Wheeler's estimate of dividends was "too high."

Guild Will Vote On Joining C.I.O.

New York, Aug. 9 (AP).—The international executive board of the American Newspaper Guild today ordered a referendum vote to decide the questions of C. I. O. affiliation and other programs adopted by the guild's national convention.

Held in response to a motion of the Columbus (Ohio) guild, the referendum will either sanction or revoke convention decisions in dispute. The issues are: C. I. O. affiliation; to admit workers other than editorial; to advocate defeat of Fascists in Spain; to support independent political action to benefit farmers and laborers; to advocate a $3,000,000,000 WPA fund; to indorse the court plan of President Roosevelt.

Ballots asking a vote of "yes" or "no" on the points will be mailed to local guild presidents within ten days, the board announced.

Senate-House Conferees Should Settle Court Reorganization Bill Today.

A MERE SHADOW of its once gigantic self, the historic court reorganization issue was to be settled today, so far as the present session of Congress is concerned, A Senate-House conference committee, according to Chairman McCarran, of the Senate group, agreed yesterday upon all save one minor provision of the once controversial bill.

The House partners to the conference declined to accept a Senate provision allowing the Federal Government to intervene in cases involving a constitutional question, when the Government made a showing of "legal or probable legal interest" in the case until trial. There appeared little question this matter would be settled today and the whittled down bill sent to the White House.

A TEMPORARY ADMINISTRATIVE authority for the $75,000,000 Bonneville power and navigation project on the Columbia River received the Senate accolade.

Supporters said the bill is merely a stop gap until a permanent authority can be established for all Columbia River projects.

The House has passed a similar bill and difference will be adjusted in a committee composed of members of both Houses.

Both bills provide for a $10,000 a year power administrator, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Senator Pittman (Democrat), Nevada, averted a threatened controversy when he decided not to submit an amendment authorizing a study of Boulder Dam power rates.

A new bill to permit cities and counties to refinance and cut their indebtedness through Federal bankruptcy proceedings was adopted by the Senate in an effort to meet Supreme Court objections to a previous similar measure . . . Forty-five Representatives wrote all their colleagues requesting support for legislation to cut HOLC interest rates from 5 to 3½ per cent and lengthen the amortization period to 20 years from the present 15 . . . The Senate Judiciary Committee approved the nominations of William McClanahan to be district attorney and Charles W. Miles to be marshal of the western Tennessee district, and Gerard D. Reilly, of Massachusetts, to be solicitor of the Labor Department.

* * * *

THE SENATE PASSED and sent White House legislation "liberalizing" rules governing payment of service-connected benefits to World War veterans and their dependents.

The measure would increase the amounts paid to widows and orphans and would bring new beneficiaries under the scope of the existing law.

Thousands Walk Out in General Strike in Silk Industry

C. I. O. Leaders Confident of Early Peace

New Jersey, Pennsylvania Plants Closed; One Man Stabbed.

By the Associated Press.

Patterson, N. J., Aug. 9.—Aided in the local Passaic Valley by employers and in Pennsylvania by unionists from other fields, thousands of silk workers quit work today in a "general" strike considered so successful by C. I. O. leaders that they quickly predicted an early settlement.

Called to take effect this morning, the quiet walkout was termed "extremely successful" eight hours later by a spokesman at national headquarters of the Textile Workers Organizing Committee, C. I. O. affiliate, in New York.

"There is practically no area where plants are not out and the manufacturers already are making moves to sign with the committee," the spokesman said. "We expect a considerable portion of the industry will be signed before the week is out."

Designed to force silk and rayon manufacturers to negotiate for improved labor conditions on a national scale, the strike affected 60,000 workers in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New England and New York. In all sectors, only those plants which remained open were picketed.

New Jersey Plants Close.

In New Jersey the strike brought a near-complete stoppage of the 500 shops in the Passaic Valley, T. W. O. C. leaders claiming all but "about 200" of the 6,000 weavers and throwsters left their looms. Spokesman for a large group of manufacturers agreed with the figures. Some employers here openly co-operated with the union, others gave passive approval, while most made no attempt to open their mills.

Employer spokesmen explained they approved a national standard of labor conditions for the industry, pointing out it would bring parity in what are now competing districts. They have felt, they said, that the Passaic Valley area has been hampered in competition with Pennsylvania because of what they contend are higher wage standards here.

Members of the Amalgamated Garment Workers and United Mine Workers joined the textile workers in their campaign to close down the silk and rayon shops in some Pennsylvania disrticts.

A mine worker-picket was stabbed in the arm and his alleged assailant arrested at the Duplan Silk Corporation plant in Hazleton. It was the lone disorder reported from the wide strike front.

Pennsylvania Workers Out.

With more than 40,000 employed in scattered Pennsylvania cities, complete State-wide figures showing the extent of the strike were unavailable. Union leaders, however, said a majority of the workers were out.

Most of the 10,000 in the New England zone watched the strike while at work. A T. W. O. C. leader at Boston said 95 per cent were under union contracts and had not been called out.

Maiden Flight Near for Navy's Largest Plane

4-Engined Flying Boat Has Living Quarters for Entire Crew.

The largest military airplane yet constructed is nearing completion at the Bridgeport, Conn., plant of the Sikorsky Division of United Aircraft Corporation, it was announced yesterday. The huge flying boat, which has been under construction for two years, is being groomed for its first flight.

The new plane, which has been designated the Sikorsky PBS, will be five or six tons heavier than any previous bomber. Continued governmental supervision has surrounded the construction of the new bomber with secrecy.

The four-engined flying boat is being constructed in line with the announced policy of the Navy Department "to explore the value of large flying boats in national defense." It will be a four-engined plane with great flying range, demand for which was exemplified recently by the non-stop flight of the twin-engine PBY patrol bombers from San Diego, Calif., to the Canal Zone.

Every important part of the plane, it was said, has been tested for its capacity to resist vibration, and safety factors far in excess of requirements have been built into the new bomber.

A complete radio compartment has been installed, with equipment comparable to that of a destroyer. A telephone system permits communication from all parts of the plane.

Sound-proofed throughout and equipped with living quarters for the crew—mechanics' workshop, galley with electric stove, water distiller and dry-ice refrigerator—long continuous operation of the XPBS will be possible.

The new bomber will carry a 110-volt electrical system for radio and galley units. An auxiliary gasoline motor drives the generator supplying the electrical output for the system. In previous flying boats the entire electrical current has been supplied by a 12-volt direct current system.

Hundreds of hours of engineering and shop labor and thousand of detailed drawings have gone into the construction of the huge ship. The model alone, constructed of wood and fabric, took six months to complete.

Army and Navy Union Aims for U. S. Charter

200 Delegates Expected at 49th Annual Convention Here.

The Army and Navy Union of the United States of America, a coalition organization of veterans of all wars, will meet in convention tomorrow at the Willard Hotel for a four-day session. More than 200 delegates are expected to attend.

Leaders during this, the forty-ninth annual session, expect to effect a reorganization which will call for a national charter by Congress and the establishment of a national headquarters at the National Capital. It is also planned to inaugurate a membership drive to enlist 12,000,000 individuals now estimated to be eligible for membership. Eligibility to membership in the Army and Navy Union calls for service in or having servied honorably in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard or National Guard.

The Army and Navy Union, which was organized in 1886 and later incorporated in Ohio in 1888, is the second oldest service men's organization in this country.

During the Spanish-American War a garrison of the order functioned on the Maine, and members were numbered among "Teddy" Roosevelt's "Rough Riders."

After 17 years the move is now being made to unite all men and women who have served honorably in the armed forces of the United States with those now in service or who may enlist later. Recently the Army and Navy Union sponsored the National Aviation Day bill which was passed by Congress.

Miss Caroline Toomey, national commander of the auxiliary, is also establishing headquarters for the women delegates who will attend the annual auxiliary encampment.

Safe Container Is Designed For Carrying Radium in Mails

Bureau of Standards Guarantees That Metal Will No Longer Ruin Films if Properly Packed in Carton.

The shipment of radium through the mails has been a problem to postal authorities, "but all their worries are over," say the experts of the National Bureau of Standards.

Wrapping up a piece of radium, addressing the package and mailing it off seemed simple enough, but radium does funny things. It gives off powerful but invisible rays. These can stop cancer and they can ruin film, too.

The trouble began when complaints from the film business industry began piling up on Postmaster James A. Farley's desk. They said that perfectly good film was ruined while going through the mails.

What was the reason?

The Postmaster General didn't know. Neither did his assistants. So they called in experts who said it was radium. The element was being sent through the mail and those pesky rays were bombarding the film in nearby parcels effecting it just like light.

Farley called a halt to the shipment of radium and asked the Bureau of Standards to investigate.

Last night, these experts, who have been at work for months produced what they have called a "protective screen" for radium packages which will make it safe for film shipments. A time-table arrangement of just how careful the shipper has to be for a short trip and for a long trip. More precaution must be taken for a long journey because there will be more bombardments by the tiny particles.

The radium package will be about 14 inches in length and 6 inches square, arranged to stand conveniently with its long dimension upright. A rigid handle on the upper end forces postal workers to hold it so that their hands will be approximately 10 inches from the radium.

Insane Person Kidnaped Girl, Fear in Paris

Letters to Aunt of Brooklyn Dancer Hint Dementia.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Aug. 9.—Police today began investigating the possibility that Jean De Koven, 22-year-old dancer from Brooklyn, N. Y., may have been abducted by a demented person.

Letters received by the girl's aunt, Miss Ida Sackheim, have led them to abandon theories the dancer's disappearance over two weeks ago was either a publicity stunt or the work of professional kidnapers, the authorities said.

The letters, demanding a $500 ransom, contained phrases that caused the police to believe the writer was demented.

Miss Sackheim, who has already attempted to pay the ransom, was prepared to follow any instructions for contacting the kidnaper, but stated she would not pay the ransom without receiving a note in Miss De Koven's handwriting.

Police also were investigating a report that the dancer, in the company of another girl and two men, were seen in Toulouse, in southern France, and along the Riviera.

Police also discovered two $10 traveler's checks issued to Miss De Koven which a man had cashed to make purchases in a fashionable Champs Elysee perfume shop. The saleswoman was unable to describe him.

B. & O. Train Derailing Called Deliberate Plot

Carlyle, Ill., Aug. 9 (AP).—Railroad special agents and Clinton County officers followed "several good leads" today in an investigation of what appeared to have been a deliberate attempt to wreck the Diplomat, fast Baltimore & Ohio passenger train, near here yesterday.

The train, speeding 65 miles an hour to St. Louis from Jersey City, N. J., struck an 8x12-inch tie plate, which had been fastened to the north rail of the single-track line. The 12 coaches left the tracks but did not overturn. Passengers and crew escaped with a shaking up.

Embryonic Twin Cut From Body of 7-Month-Old Girl

Attaches at Mt. Mary's Hospital said the baby would leave the hospital tomorrow, apparently none the worse for the operation.

Dr. Francis Scott, of Huntington, performed the operation last week in the presence of several physicians. He declined to discuss it. It was emphasized that the case was not one of Siamese twins.

Young Roosevelts Take After Father

New York, Aug. 9 (AP).—Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt considers her children lucky in that their looks were inherited from the President rather than from her, she says in the seventh chapter of her life story, appearing in the Ladies' Home Journal tomorrow.

"Luckily for all of them," she writes, "the children have inherited their looks from their father's side of the family. One or two of them have eyes like my side of the Roosevelts, but eyes happen to have been rather good in that branch of the family.

"I had prominent front teeth, not a very good mouth and chin, but these were not handed down to any of my children."

Arlington Obtains Milk-Price Review

A review of the milk situation in Arlington County has been promised by the Virginia Milk Commission, William D. Medley, Arlington County delegate, announced last night. He had spent the day in Richmond, conferring with the commission and Gov. Peery.

Medley said that the conference came as a result of many protests against the price being fixed at 14 cents a quart, and two injunctions against the Highland Farms Dairy, preventing that company delivering milk at 11 cents a quart to customers in Alexandria and Arlington.

Rockefeller Tribute.

Chicago, Aug. 9 (AP).—The University of Chicago announced today the establishment of a memorial to the late John D. Rockefeller, founder of the school. Harold H. Swift, president of the university's board of trustees, said the university's $1,800,000 Gothic chapel, built in 1928 with funds supplied by Rockefeller, had been named in his honor.

Gang Storms Jail, Frees Ex-Convicts

Chicago, Aug. 9 (U.P.).—Gunmen stormed the jail at Oak Lawn, Chicago suburb, and freed two former convicts from their cell shortly before midnight.

Oak Lawn police told Chicago authorities "four or six men" battered down a cell door to liberate the prisoners while Oak Lawn officers were investigating a traffic accident and the jail was unguarded.

The prisoners were John Filas, 20, who has served two terms in the house of correction, and Steve Kasper, 32, twice sentenced to the State penitentiary at Joliet. They were arrested at Oak Lawn yesterday while tampering with an automobile.

Warrants Name All In Slander Beating

New Orleans, Aug. 9 (AP).—The flogging of 47-year-old Oscar Kay by a 17-year-old girl over an accusation that he told "lies" about her culminated today in an assault charge against her and a slander charge against him.

Kay, WPA worker who protested he was tied to a tree and beaten in the presence of a crowd of onlookers in the girl's front yard Saturday, formally charged pretty Miss Eloise Willis and her father, Alfred C. Willis, 56-year-old grocer, with assaulting and beating him.

Assistant District Attorney Sidney A. Mitchell then charged Kay with slander. The girl, a 135-pound brunette, said she went to a hospital recently for an appendicitis operation and was informed Kay circulated false tales she went there to become a mother.

Housing Measure Changes Studied

A six-point amendment agenda was before the House Banking Committee today, as it prepared to meet this morning to vote on provisions of the $726,000,000 Wagner housing bill, passed last week by the Senate.

The committee spent yesterday in executive session discussing the bill, following conclusion of public hearings.

Amendments that have been offered range from proposal to eliminate "capital grant" alternatives in the bill, to changes in the bill's 60-year loan features. Other suggested amendments would reduce the percentage that could be lent to any one State, increase local contributions to housing projects, and retain or eliminate the Senate's $4,000 house unit limitation, and assignment of the program to the Interior Department.

Youth Confesses Slaying of Girl

Glen Barker told District Attorney Raymond T. Dohr that jealousy prompted him to follow Helen Wellhoue to a dance hall at Twelve Corners, near here, last night and stab her fatally in the chest with a pocket knife as she stepped off the dance floor.

"He put his arm around the girl as though to embrace here and suddenly stabbed her," Dohr said.

Although the youth followed the girl and her escort to the hall, Dohr said he believed the attack was made on the "impulse of the moment."

Indians Are Called Anti-Government Campaign Victim

Window Rock, Ariz., Aug. 9 (AP).—Oliver La Farge, president of the American Association on Indian Affairs, asserted today the Navajos are "the victims of a violent anti-Government propaganda . . . to build them into martyrs for political reasons."

La Farge was completing a three-day investigation of Indian unrest over stock reduction and grazing regulations promulgated by the Indian Service. He acted in behalf of the association, a non-partisan group.

La Farge said his investigation showed the arrest of Indians for refusal to dip their sheep "a simple arrest for a clear offense."

"It is my conclusion," he said, "the Indians now in Fort Defiance Jail are the victims of a violent anti-Government propaganda, which has misled them into violating an essential grazing ordinance, and now an attempt is being made to build them into martyrs for political reasons. What lies back of that calls for further investigation."

Mother Unconscious, 3 Children Die of Gas

Lawrence, Mass., Aug. 9 (AP).—Puzzled officers kept watch tonight at the hospital bed of a pretty divorcee, Mrs. Isabella Dibias, 32, hoping she would recover consciousness and clear up the mystery of the deaths of her three children and her own critical condition.

Mrs. Diblas was found unconscious from illuminating gas in her tightly-locked home shortly after 7 a. m. today. She was clad only in a nightgown. In various positions in the home were sprawled the bodies of her children, Genevieve, 12; Mary, 10, and Raymond, 8. Gas, pouring from wide-open jets, had ended their lives, officers reported.

Magill Urges Amendment to Dam Tax Leaks

International Treaties Also Suggested to Stop Evasions.

By the Associated Press.

The House Ways and Means Committee heard Roswell Magill, Undersecretary of the Treasury, suggest yesterday the Government might use a constitutional amendment and international treaties to stop tax evasion and avoidance.

Magill testified at a committee hearing on legislation designed to close some tax loopholes immediately. In response to questions, he said he has reasonable hopes that the States would approve a cnostitutional amendment permitting the Federal Government to tax interest on State securities, but it would have to be a reciprocal arrangement, he said, allowing the States to tax Federal securities.

He also asserted the State Department, working with the Treasury, has begun discussions with other nations about interchange of tax information.

Canada Willing.

"Canada has already expressed its willingness to undertake the negotiations looking toward a treaty of this character," Magill said. "It is possible that similar treaties may be negotiated with several European nations."

On behalf of the Treasury, he indorsed recommendations of a Senate-House Tax Committee that revenue law loopholes be sealed by increasing the impact of taxes on foreign and domestic personal holding companies, non-resident aliens, incorporated yachts, country estates and personal talents, multiple trusts and those who make artificial deducations for interest and business expense and for losses from sales or exchanges of property

Treasury Stand Questioned.

Representative Woodruff (Republican), of Michigan, asked the Undersecretary to explain why the Treasury had not suggested earlier that tax loopholes be closed. He also wanted to know if there is any particular reason for closing only some of them now.

"If a storm is coming up," Magill replied, "and there are four or five windows you can close, it is better to close them even though there are one or two the rain may come through before you can reach them."

He said if the pending legislation is deferred there will be serious revenue losses.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., Aug. 9.—The Farm Neighbors' League of Urbana tomorrow will erect a large sign along the Frederick-Washington highway, 3 miles south of here, bearing the following message to passing motorists:

"See America's most famous bad road, the road that Gov. Nice promised the farmers March 11, 1937, to be rebuilt at once.

"See 'dynamite bend,' where an auto was blasted from frozen mire—5 miles south—40 miles from the Nation's proud Capital."

Announcement of the plan to erect the sign tomorrow was made by Charles L. White, secretary of the league. White said a number of farmers of the community will "unveil" the sign. White further explained that permission to erect the sign had been obtained from the State Roads Commission.

The erection of the sign, White said, is the initial step in a county-wide campaign to get improved roads. In the near future, he said, he will fly over the county in an airplane and drop literature calling attention to road conditions in Frederick County.

Southern Accent Worries Directors Of Richmond Fete

Richmond, Va., Aug. 9 (AP).—That "Southern accent" is proving no end of worry to directors of the "Cavalcade of the Cavaliers," outdoor spectacle to be presented at the City Stadium, September 13 to 23, in connection with the Richmond bicentennial celebration.

The actors must decide between speaking as an Englishman or as a Southerner.

As a solution to the problem the director of "Cavalcade of the Cavaliers" is considering having the actors play the opening scenes with a decided English accent nad as the drama progresses to gradually soften the speech until it becomes the pronunciation of the educated Virginian of today.

Fate May Cheat Old Babe, 99, Out of New Quarters at Zoo

Elephant-Matriarch's Feet Give Way as Elephant House Nears Completion; Ancient Pachyderm Lives Almost Solely on Liquids.

From her sick bed at the Washington Zoo, Old Babe can hear workmen putting finishing touches on a new elephant house. It is a grand $300,000 structure, and it will be ready for occupancy around October 1.

Zoo keepers fear that will be too late though, for the 99-year-old matriarch who toured with Barnum and Bailey's Circus for a half century and is now the oldest elephant in captivity.

Babe's feet gave way on her Sunday, and it is doubted they ever will hold up her 8,500 pounds again. The zoo is hoping only to make her last days comfortable.

"She shuffled around on her big old feet for a long time. Now they are worn out. Would you expect a sick old lady of almost 100 years to get up and kick around again?" Ernest P. Walker, assistant director, asked yesterday.

Only the least bit of hay can Babe eat now, because her teeth are almost as weak as her feet. The heat bothers her, too, but she accepts her liquid diet and all attentions just as she accepts the fact she will not have a room in the new elephant house.

"She doesn't mind, nor is she in pain. Her condition is just one of general debility, and her disposition is not hurt a bit. She's a fine old character, but there is nothing we can do for her," Walker said.

Babe cheated old age for nine years, by refusing to lie down. Fate tricked her Sunday morning and she fell, stumbling on the door sill. It was just as she had foreseen. She was not able to rise again. It took a block and tackle to get her moved from the doorway to a place of comfort.

If there had been no fall, there would have been something else, the zoo helpers believe. They have seen her general decline for sometime and several days ago separated her from Ketchil and Jubine, the two young elephants who will enjoy the new house.

"She may live a year, and then she may not live another day. The elephant's life span is just about the same as that of a human being. There is not much one can predict after a person lives to be 99."

Board to Pick Place to Send Lame Children

Youngsters Must Wait Until Fall Meeting for Assignment.

Crippled children of the Weightman and Magruder schools, declared unsafe recently by the Fire Department, must wait until the fall meeting of the Board of Education in order to know whether they may attend classes.

In a statement made yesterday, acting Schools Superintendent J. J. Crane said that there can be no decision before the board meets early in September.

The Weightman School, which houses 51 crippled white children, and the Magruder School, where 35 colored children are in attendance, were both condemned recently when they were found to be "fire traps," according to a fire inspector's report.

The report found that the schools were not fireproof and that they had only one fire escape each as an exit for crippled children in case of emergency.

New schools to supplant the condemned schools are provided for in a projected five-year plan.

Italo-British Friendship Parley, Proposed 4-Power Pact Keep France Worried

Talks Menace Paris-Moscow Accord, Belief

England Speeds Work on Conference to Relieve 2-Year Tension.

By the Associated Press.

London, Aug. 9.—Possible French objections to a practical working agreement between Great Britain and Italy arose today as diplomats began preparing Britain's case for the Rome friendship talks scheduled to start at the end of September.

Diplomats were compelled to keep in mind constantly a four-power Western pact to replace the abandoned Locarno—reliably reported as a possible outcome of the growing friendliness—would raise a storm of protest in a Peoples' Front France bound by a pact with Russia.

On the other hand, it was felt likely that France, which has been following the British lead in most matters of foreign policy through traditional fear of Germany, would realize that, in the long run, she would stand to benefit as much as Britain by making friends with Italy.

Chamberlain Boosted.

Foreign office experts, therefore, have set themselves with enthusiasm to the task of preparing the groundwork for the talks in which Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden and Count Galeazzo Ciano, Italian foreign minister, may participate. The steps taken toward a new Locarno already are boosting the name of Premier Neville Chamberlain as high as the now shattered Locarno Treaty boosted that of his late brother, Sir Austen, in 1925.

Practical considerations for the safety of Britain's imperial lifeline through the Mediterranean are felt to be at the root of the Premier's move to end two years of embittered relations between England and Italy. Significantly, the first moves were made on the eve of the imposing Italian war games in Libya—Italy's colony on the border of Egypt—and around the strongly fortified base at Pantelleria, Sicily.

May Recognize Conquest.

The Mediterranean situation has been and will remain deadlocked, it was felt, as long as Italy remained entrenched in the Balearic Islands in the western Mediterranean and could threaten the highway to the Suez Canal from Pantelleria, while Britain could throttle Italy's Ethiopian empire by closing—at least on paper—the Suez Canal.

Chamberlain, it is felt, is now prepared to remove the "bugbear of Ethiopia" by recognizing Italy's conquest; in addition to this, informed commentators said, Chamberlain eventually was prepared to grant Italy a zone of influence in Spanish Morocco, recognize the insurgent Spanish regime as a belligerent and aid Italy in engineering the Locarno pact among France, Germany, Italy and Britain.

In exchange, these commentators said, Britain would insist on Italy's abandoning the Spanish Balearic Islands after the Spanish civil war is over, absolute cessation of anti-British propaganda in Arabian countries, guarantees against eventual Italian domination in Spain and, perhaps, dismantling of the Pantelleria fortifications.

East and West United in Grief at Moy Rites

A portion of the huge throng—white, yellow and black—which turned out yesterday to pay final respects to Charley Moy, unofficial mayor of Washington's Chinatown. Following services at the residence in H street, interment was in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

Grieving Crowd Packs Street For Funeral of Charley Moy

'Mayor' of Capital's Chinatown Buried in Cedar Hill Cemetery in Golden Casket; Oriental, American Bands Play for Rites.

A sad-faced crowd saw Charley Moy, unofficial mayor of Washington's Chinatown, lowered in a golden casket into Western earth when the sun, like the blazing ball on a Chinese drapery, was low yesterday.

By the early afternoon the street in front of Charley's Joy Inn in the heart of Washington's Chinese section began filling with silent people of all races. Some of them pointed to the closed Joy Inn and remarked on what a good fellow Charley was when he presided over the hot teacups in the cool of many evenings. And they talked of his success—how he came here a poor boy from China—"Charley's got quite a lot salted away," they said, when the hearse was coming up and the mourners moved into the house next door.

They banked on both sides of the 600 block of H street, but policemen made them stand to the sides of the steps leading into the house because the mourners wished to see Charley for the last time. A small hill of flowers surrounded the golden casket in the dim room.

A Chinese, expressionless, sat at a table in the hall, writing down the names of other Chinese who entered and spoke to him secretly. A Chinese shade was on the lamp above his head, and a pot of tea was at his elbow. He motioned to the room where the body lay. A low sound, like crying, could be heard in the hall, but the expressions of the Chinese mourners in the hall were unchanged.

Chines Band Plays.

A Chinese band from New York City was in a motor bus across the street and its music, sometimes shrill, sometimes pleading, was incessant. Nearby was an American band, waiting. People moved into the house endlessly.

The Rev. A. H. Stainback told of Charley's humble beginning and how he persevered.

Charley, he said, came to this country poor, friendless. But he enriched himself in the world's rewards and found also something finer, the minister said, turning to the spiritual qualities of Moy.

The minister turned to the body and recited:

"Abide with me, fast falls the eventide . . ."

The flowers were moved toward the street and the American band played "Nearer My God to Thee." The Chinese band crashed in with a weird, sorrowful, cymbal-beating music that seemed to vibrate on the hot asphalt.

The crowd formed a lane from the steps to the outer street. The arm of every Chinese carried a black mourning band. Both bands were playing. A Chinese boy, convulsed with sorrow, was brought down the steps, heavily supported. A Chinese woman, bent double with sorrow, was supported behind him. Two Chinese followed next with a huge picture of Charley Moy. The frame was made of exotic flowers.

The pallbearers, Thom Fang, P. Moy, Dickson Moy, B. Moy, Joe Wing, D. Moy, Howard Moy, Harry Wong, Jin Jow and Frank Wong, grouped on either side of the hearse. Relatives entered automobiles behind. Near the front three Chinese carried the huge picture. The blue-uniformed band led the procession around the block. Then the sounds quieted as the line moved the long way to the cemetery.

At the gate, a small group was waiting. They saw the American band fall again into the lead, playing a solemn funeral march. The line wound over twisted roads to a high hill where the grave was covered. People were dense all around it.

For about five minutes the American band played "Onward Christian Soldiers," "Oh, Come, All Ye Faithful," other hymns and repetitions. The Chinese band could be heard playing back in the trees.

When the band moved up to the grave, it was quiet for a spell, and incense was placed. The picture of Moy was brought to the grave, and the Chinese band played a wild, beating hymn as the heavy casket was moved. The minister read the service and recited "Crossing the Bar."

Give Away Nickels, Candy.

Chinese, standing near the casket, ripped the mourning bands from their arms and placed them on the casket. Many of them picked flowers from the wreaths and dropped them into the grave.

At the gate of the cemetery two Chinese were stationed, their hands reaching out to every automobile that chanced to stop. The Chinese were giving away small bits of candy and 5-cent pieces, wrapped in white paper.

The Chinese would speak little of these customs. They would simply say, in lowered voices, it was a custom of their people. It was others who related how Charley Moy's funeral cost more than $3,000 and how people were there from the Chinese Embassy, from Philadelphia, New York and many other places.

They simply held out their hands and their faces were expressionless when people accepted the bits of candy and the nickels.

Chicago, Aug. 9 (AP).—Little Donald Horst went back home today with his foster parents, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Horst. County Judge Edmund K. Jarecki awarded them temporary custody of the 31 months old child pending a hearing on their petition to adopt him on August 23.

The boy's real mother, Miss Lydia Nelson, who signed a document giving her consent to the adoption, was not in court when her son was reclaimed by the couple who had reared him since the day of his birth.

Moscow, Aug. 9 (AP).—Sigismund Levaneffsky, the "Lindbergh of Russia," is expected to attempt a transpolar passenger flight to Fairbanks, Alaska, within a few days. Officials said there was a possibility the American-trained pilot would attempt to reach New York or Chicago. The start depended upon weather reports from the Soviet floating polar camp.

Bull, Heat Maddened, Gores Two Villagers

London, Aug. 9 (AP).—Heat, in the eighties, maddened a bull in a Kent village today and caused the latest casualties in England's nine-day hot spell.

Two men who were driving the bull to market at Milton Regis were gored, one critically. Then the animal charged a truck and escaped, with police in pursuit. London had one new heat fatality, its sixth.

Break Believed Near In Webster Slaying

Providence, R. I., Aug. 9 (AP).—Coroner Conrad K. Strauss predicted a break today in the three-weeks-old slaying of Dr. George W. Webster, 39-year-old society obstetrician.

"I believe we have found a motive," he said. While police admitted they were "still without a clew and open to all theories," Strauss asserted his inquest "has made considerable headway" and was "following one line of investigation thoroughly."

Wadsworth Named To Fair Committee

Speaker William B. Bankhead yesterday appointed Representative James W. Wadsworth (Republican), of New York, as a member of the New York World's Fair Commission, but the Speaker's action was not announced until after House Republicans had blocked immediate consideration of a bill appropriating $3,000,000 already authorized for Federal participation in the project.

The objection to the bill, which also carries $1,500,000 for Federal participation in San Francisco's Golden Gate Exposition, was made by Representative John Taber (Republican), of New York, who said he acted upon the request of Representative Hamilton Fish, jr. (Republican), of New York, who was absent.

A Republican caucus recently designated Fish, minority member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, to be appointed to the Commission, but the Speaker, acting upon a request of the White House, declined to name him.

Brazil Wants U. S. Ships for Patrol

Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, Aug. 9 (AP).—An official at the ministry of finance said today that the six destroyers which Brazil wishes to lease from the United States would be assigned to patrol the coast.

The six destroyers would be acquired under a program to build up the Brazilian navy, which has been going forward for some time.

This program includes nine new destroyers, three of which are already under construction here, eight submarines, three of which have already been acquired from Italy, two cruisers, six minesweepers and a schoolship.

The schoolship has been placed in commission. It was purchased from England.

Nazis Aroused by Red Bid to Buy U.S. Warcraft

Berlin, Aug. 9 (AP).—The entire German press printed big headlines today over reports that the Soviet Union was trying to buy three battleships in the United States.

One comment said: "This is a very remarkable attempt of the Bolshevists to get a foothold in Washington political circles through patronizing private, capitalistic business."

It also was suggested that since it takes three years to build a battleship, the United States Government "could seize them for itself," if the political situation "changed" before the ships were delivered.

Brother's Slayer Cleared.

Richmond, Ind., Aug. 9 (AP).—Police accepted today the story of Roby Hobbs, who told of shooting his 19-year-old brother, Ernest, believing the boy to be a prowler. The youth died shortly after receiving a shotgun charge in his chest.

Girl's Slayer Transferred As Violence Is Feared

New York, Aug. 9 (AP).—Fear of possible disorders by Brooklyn residents today prompted police to move Lawrence Marks, 49, to a Manhattan jail after the ex-convict was indicted for first degree murder in connection with the attacking and strangling of 8-year-old Paula Magagna. Marks, twice-convicted of sex crimes and released only June 16 last from Great Meadow Prison, has confessed the crime.

Japan's Troops Censor Peiping Books, Schools

Ferret Out Nationalism in University, Camp on Temple Grounds.

By the Associated Press

Peiping, (Tuesday) Aug. 10.—The soldiers of Japan erased methodically from this old capital of the emperors of China today all traces of the nationalism of Sun Yat-sen and Chiang Kai-shek.

Under Japanese military guard a brigade of 3,000 marched in Sunday—the city gates swung open now and then, to permit a well-watched populace some measure of freedom.

In the public schools they forbade the teaching of the principles of national salvation of Sun Yat-sen, the Chinese "liberator." These, they said, were impractical and "tended to poison youthful minds."

Without hesitation, the troops searched Tsing Hua University, built in 1911 as the result of United States remittance of more than $10,000,000 of the Boxer indemnity. They looked for traces of activity which they might not approve.

Then they forbade the payment to professors and others of some 170,000 Chinese dollars (about $51,000).

Middle schools (high schools) were told to reopen, because the situation was "again normal." Chinese, however, feared the schools would be allowed to operate only in strict accordance with Japanese desires.

Japanese troops patroled the streets in truckloads. A medical unit of 300 new arrivals set up a camp on the grounds of the Temple of Heaven.

Snell to Push For Ruling on CampaignBook

Calls Cummings' Answer to Legality Question 'Inane.'

Indignant at what he called an "inane answer" from Attorney General Homer Cummings to a demand for a ruling on the legality of Democratic campaign book sales, Representative Bertrand H. Snell, New York, yesterday vowed to "continue the fight until we get action."

Snell, House minority leader pressing for weeks for a congressional investigation of the reported sale of the books at $250 each to corporations throughout the country, not only called Cummings' letter "inane" but snapped:

"It doesn't mean a thing."

Cummings, noting Snell's charges of alleged violation of the corrupt practices act, said in the July 30 letter:

"As you are aware under existing statutes the Attorney General is permitted to render opinions only to the President and to the heads of the executive departments of the Government on questions of law arising in their respective departments.

"Attorney Generals have particularly defrained from giving opinions to members of the legislative branch of the Government as to scope or effect of legislation or specific acts.

"You are informed that the department is making an inquiry with respect to this matter.

"If you have in your possession evidence which you deem indicates a violation of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, may I suggest that you transmit it to this department for our consideration?"

Most of those indicted are fugitives, including the two alleged leaders of the ring which Murray L. Gurfein, Dewey's assistant, estimateded, squeezed several million dollars yearly from clothing manufacturers.

'It's Too Hot to Fight,' Say Spanish Rebels

London, Aug. 9 (U.P.).—Gen. Gonzalo Queipo de Llano of southern Spanish rebel army radiocast from Seville tonight it was too hot to fight and it would be a fine thing "if the loyalists would be considerate enough not to attack until it is cooler.

"We are carrying on according to the laws of the hot season, and all is tranquil," he said. "It is said that the reds are preparing to attack us violently, but we hope that the heat will prevent it. Next month with cooler weather we may see them again."

British Metal Dealers May Bid for Leviathan

New York, Aug. 9 (AP).—Two British dealers in scrap metal, now in heavy demand in Britain for its big armaments construction program, arrived today, but declined to comment on London reports they would bid for the United States liner Leviathan.

United States Line officials said the Maritime Commission in Washington would decide what will be done with the Leviathan, America's biggest merchant ship, which has been tied up at Hoboken, N. J., since 1934.

Toward Better Health.

Though it covers only a six months' period, the Health Department's report of a decline in deaths from the major communicable diseases is encouraging. The hope now will be that the gains can be held throughout the remainder of the year, and longer. Diphtheria deaths have been reduced 50 per cent; the rates for both tuberculosis and pneumonia are down 10 per cent; infant mortalities show a small decrease. Dr. Ruhland and his colleagues should be given every support in their efforts to maintain this trend.

It will be a long fight, however. For, despite the new gains, Washington is still far behind the rest of the Nation in regard to health. Its improved tuberculosis rate is 102.7 deaths per 100,000, while the national rate is 56. Its pneumonia rate is 167, as compared with the national average of 79.4. And, although its diphtheria record is a shade better than the national figure of 3.3, this compares poorly with the rate in such cities as Baltimore, where deaths from this disease have been held consistently below 1 in 100,000. Finally, the city's general mortality rate is scarcely changed, being still several points above the national average.

These unenviable comparisons arise mainly from the fact that Washington's public-health funds are notoriously inadequate. As a result, the Health Department is woefully understaffed and ill-equipped. However, a tremendous gain has been made in the fight against syphilis here. This is largely because the public, aroused by the recent intense publicity given the disease, has been taking the initiative against it. A 50 per cent increase in Wassermann tests has been noted in Washington during the past six months. Moreover, venereal-disease clinics report an increase in patients from 76,000 to 90,000 in the same period.

This new and welcome public co-operation against syphilis is not peculiar to Washington. A survey conducted by the American Institute of Public Opinion indicates that 87 per cent of the people in this country would be willing to submit to blood tests for syphilis. If accomplished, such a wholesale check-up would be a smashing blow at this insidious disease. With its prevalence and principal concentration points known, measures could then be applied to eradicate it.

A Court For The Poor.

It is especially appropriate that a Congress which has discussed judicial reform so extensively should approve the bill to establish a small claims and conciliation branch in the District's Municipal Court.

As noted in the report of the Senate District Committee, this measure is aimed at "two practical obstacles" which "have stood in the way of full and equal justice to the citizen of limited means, namely, delay and expense." It would minimize delay by providing shorter notices to litigants, by requiring the court to sit in night sessions by eliminating technicalities and simplifying procedure. Fees would be reduced to a flat rate of $1 and even this could be waived in the case of indigent citizens, without imposing on them the stigma of pauperism. Cases could be handled from beginning to end without the services of a lawyer.

This simple procedure would be limited to cases involving $50 or less. Most of these, it is believed, would be settled through voluntary arbitration. That informal means of adjusting differences has been used to good advantage in other cities. Several tragic events in Washington during recent years might have been avoided if the courts had been in a position to manifest a human interest in personal disputes.

"The bill," to quote the report once more, "approaches the broad problems involved from a social rather than a legalistic viewpoint, yet fully preserves the substantive rights of all parties, including the right to jury trial and the right to appellate review." And this is accomplished without any need for additional appropriations or new personnel.

For this constructive movement toward justice for the poor, the community owes a special vote of thanks to Judge Nathan Cayton, sponsor of the bill. His careful work on the measure, plus the enthusiastic indorsement of the Senate District Committee and approval by the Senate, should induce the House to complete legislative enactment of the bill without delay.

New Burden For The Schools.

Technically speaking, the decision of the Court of Appeals in the Kemp case means only that a child from a Virginia suburb may continue her studies at the District Gordon Junior High School. Actually, however, it has a vital bearing upon the fiscal relationship between the Federal Government and the Capital City.

No fault can be found with the decision of the court. Justice Stephens and his colleagues simply decided that the law in question means what it says. It provides that "all pupils whose parents are employed officially or otherwise in the District of Columbia shall be admitted and taught free of charge in the schools of said District."

Congress inserted that clause into the law as a gesture of generosity to many families living in nearby communities. That attitude can be readily appreciated. Education in the National Capital ought to be free to the children of temporary Government officials and to families whom the growth of the city forces to move across the Maryland or Virginia lines. Any other position would become less tenable with the increase of congestion in the District of Columbia.

But Congress has refused to carry sound reasoning to its obvious conclusion. When it considers the appropriation of money for the schools an entirely unreasonable different attitude prevails. For a number of years Congress has failed to make adequate provision for the schooling of District residents, to say nothing of the non-residents who have been invited by it to share the advantages of the local education system.

It costs District taxpayers an average of $59.83 to maintain a child for one year in the elementary schools, $87.32 in the junior high schools, and $114.15 in the senior high schools. Fairness demands that Congress pay these charges for non-resident pupils coming here solely at the invitation of the National Government. But no thought seems to have been given to that aspect of the problem. Instead, Congress has persistently whittled down its allowance to the District at a time when the budgets for schools and other municipal agencies have been necessarily expanding.

No accurate count of the non-resident pupils in Washington schools seems to have been made. But the number is considerable. No doubt it will be increased now that all pressure to exclude the children of non-resident parents who work in the District must be relaxed. Unless Congress is ready to appropriate more generously for the schools, and to increase the Federal allowance, children who live in the District will have to accept a lower standard of education.

The decision of the court in this case coincides with a warning from the Fire Department that the Weightman and Magruder schools are unsafe for the 86 crippled children who have been using them. Together with the sharp increase in appropriations for 1938 which the Board of Education feels compelled to ask, these incidents make a strong case for more considerate treatment of the schools. They should not be forgotten when next year's budget is formulated.

Prosperity Reserves.

It is a new, and not particularly appealing, development of the old "prosperity reserve" theory which now emanates, perhaps merely as a trial balloon, from the business advisory council of the Department of Commerce.

Economists, notably Otto Mallery, of Philadelphia, have long waged contraction of public works in periods of prosperity, in order to create a reserve of construction to be undertaken in times of depression. It has been pointed out time and again that this is a fruitful field for Governmental planning and the National Resources Committee has interested itself in the problem.

However, the scheme attributed to the business advisory council goes further. It would currently appropriate large sums for the future construction of public works, depositing the funds in a special account to be drawn upon when the trade cycle again dips down to a depression level.

It is difficult to see what useful purpose would be served by the actual appropriation of such money and it is certain that the temptation to use it immediately, when once appropriated, would always be strong. Certainly the present is not the appropriate time to make the suggestion effective. The Government has been carrying the spending-during-depression half of the prosperity reserve theory to extremes. When it has stopped the orgy of spending and safely balanced the budget it will be time enough to consider making appropriations for utilization in a future depression.

If the business advisory council of the Department of Commerce wishes to make a constructive suggestion it will urge immediate application of the economy half of the prosperity reserve theory. That is the difficult, and at present totally neglected, part of the program.

Transportation Leadership.

Since the day of the Baltimore clipper and the pony express, the United States has been a leader in devising means of rapid transportation. The transcontinental railroad was another of our achievements, followed shortly by development of the automobile which inspired the building of millions of miles of highway leading into virtually every corner of the land. Today's efforts in this field, however, have concentrated on neither land or sea travel, but on swift and easy flight. And of all the results, none is more outstanding than the conquest of the skies above the Pacific.

Credit for the five-and-a-half-day service which now connects this country with the Orient and Antipodes goes principally to Pan American Airways. In recognition of this, President Roosevelt last week presented its president with the Collier Trophy, awarded annually for "the greatest achievement in aviation in America." In other years it has gone to Glenn Curtiss, Orville Wright, Dr. Elmer A. Sperry and W. Starling Burgess. The latter, incidentally, is the co-designer of the yacht Ranger, this year's pre-eminent defender of the America's Cup. None will contest Pan-American's right to join this illustrious company of aviation "greats."

But, green as these laurels may be, the company is not content to rest on them. On Saturday, one of its "clippers" completed a second round-trip survey flight between Newfoundland and Ireland. With the same care and caution which make its Pacific flights possible, Pan American's pilots and engineers are now plotting a regular air service through the difficult weather of the Atlantic.

If this feat is accomplished, American airmen may claim a distinguished place in that section of history's annals which records the names of Columbus, de Gama, Magellan and others who blazed the way for the world's progress.

German Church Holds Out.

Two recent events in Berlin emphasize the strength of the movement against Nazi domination of the churches. An emergency court has exonerated Dr. Friedrich Dibelius, retired leader of the Evangelical Union, of charges that he had maliciously attacked the Hitler government. And this indication that the courts will not sustain flimsy charges preferred by the government's church minister was followed by a large-scale demonstration against the Nazi's restrictions on religious observances.

It is too often assumed that the German courts have been brought under executive dictation, as have the law-making agencies in that land. Of course, the courts have to uphold the law as it is decreed by the Hitler government. But the trial of Dr. Dibelius shows that at least some judges will not tolerate religious persecution which goes beyond the letter of the law. In spite of the fact that Hanns Kerrl, the church minister, personally appeared against the ecclesiastical leader, the court decided the case on its own merits.

There may not be a direct connection between this judicial rebuke to the Nazis and the demonstration on Sunday outside the church of the imprisoned Dr. Niemoeller. But Herr Kerrl's increasing difficulties with the churches must be a source of considerable concern to the Nazi regime. In matters of religion the German people are not so easily regimented. They have a tradition of independence which goes back to the days of Martin Luther. And when the authorities find it necessary to disperse prayer meetings for incarcerated church leaders, as they did at Dahlem, the danger of arousing widespread hostility becomes very real.

Religious groups are the only ones in Germany which have so far successfully defied the Nazi dictatorship. But their opposition is the more significant just because other resistance to the backward sweep of culture forces in Germany has been crushed. If the courageous fight for religious freedom leads to frequent disturbances they will soon be amplified by the participation of other downtrodden groups. Yesterday's decision to postpone the Rev. Martin Niemoeller's trial, presumably as a result of the demonstration by his followers, indicates that official Berlin is already, and not prematurely, apprehensive.

"O" Stands For Okapi.

"O", in many an alphabet book, stands for Okapi. "What's an okapi? How does the okapi go? I wanna see an okapi." Many a devotee of the alphabet book has thus demanded. Probably the most common reply has been that "an okapi is like a zebra, dear, only different."

Quite different, as a look at the creature which recently arrived at the Bronx Zoo, in New York, will reveal. Being the first of his kind ever brought to this country, numerous descriptions of him are now being circulated. To begin with, he is more like the giraffe—zoologically speaking—than the zebra. And he doesn't "go" at all, the vocal chords of the family being quite rudimentary. Truth to tell, the okapi is almost entirely rudimentary. His bone structure is of a pattern which Nature generally discarded some 15,000,000 years ago. Scientists, indeed, refer to him lightly as "the living fossil."

But the okapi, if he knows of this, cares little. He lives placidly in the depths of the Belgian Congo, highly esteemed by the pygmies of the region for his succulent meat, but also greatly feared because he can repel even a lion's attack with his battering-ram skull and his rib-crushing hoofs. Possessed of four stomachs, and eyes which operate independently of each other, allowing him to look two ways at once, he lives a solitary life behind the camouflage of his striped red and purplish markings.

If these traits seem to be a little confusing, remember only this about the okapi: He is fastidiously clean. Every morning and night he bathes himself thoroughly, with the result that he is the most nearly odorless animal in all smelly Africa. What is more, he is never bothered by ticks or flies. But this bathing enthusiasm of the okapi is also his Achilles' heel. As in the case of the specimen now in New York, he is usually caught in traps planted at his favorite watering hole.

Repeal Of Section 213.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

In your report of the repeal of Section 213, the so-called marriage clause of the economy act of 1932, you state that "1,835 married persons were dropped during the five-year period of its operation." The taxpaying public should know that there would have been that number discharged in any case to reduce the cost of government—the purpose of the act—and it was just that where married couples had two incomes and living in luxury that one of them should be discharged and not a single person or a married person, with wife and dependents. The repeal of Section 213 without a revision downward of the pay schedule is more a piece of political chicanery than of statesmanship.

There are probably thousands of married couples in civil service with an average income of $4,800 per annum, and hundreds of thousands of highly qualified persons without jobs or income. What do organized women and the Congress think about childless married couples living in luxury or profligacy while fathers and mothers of dependent children must languish in poverty? EDWIN EVANS.

Judges' Terms.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

It is doubtful that the President's power to fill vacancies by recess appointments under article 2, section 2, clause 3, of the Constitution, applies to vacancies in the judiciary. How can the President during the recess of the Senate, grant a commission "which shall expire at the end of their next session" when article 3, section 1, provides that "the judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior . . ."?

Pitching Duel?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

What's the matter with Shirley Povich? Has he got a grudge against the Washington team and especially certain players? Take his account of yesterday's game. It was misleading to those who weren't at the ball park.

"Washington won a ball game yesterday but would prefer that no questions be asked. Because then it would have to be told how they beat luckless Elon Hogsett who watched with horror as a routine ground ball took a maniacal hop . . . The Nats have little business owning that ball game. Hogsett was seemingly the winner of an old-fashioned pitching duel with Wes Ferrell when the old left-hander got a brutal break in the luck."

Pitching duel? Ferrell struck out seven and gave only eight hits in 12 innings, while Hogsett struck out four, gave 17 hits and made a wild throw to first. Wes pitched a great game, fielded perfectly, made a two-bagger and scored one of Washington's three runs. Hogsett pitched 17 hits, made a wild throw, made no hits and scored no runs.

To Povich, that's "an old-fashioned pitching duel" in which Hogsett, mind you, not Ferrell, was deprived of a "richly deserved victory!" The Nats didn't make an error, and—but enough said.

Chicago War Days.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Like Mr. Paul Murray, who wrote recently in your Post Impressionist column, I remember the war days in Chicago, but, being 15 years older than he, I was drilling on Stagg Field by invitation of the University of Chicago while he was digging trenches in the corner lot.

I write to express my sympathy with Mr. Murray, first, because he "believed every piece of propaganda that the Americans and the Allies could grind out." We South Siders did not think much of the West Side and it is a shock to find that West Siders in their early adolescence were reading the news so thoroughly that they caught all the special one-sided emphasis which was here and there injected into the news by propagandists. Our simple South Side boys were satisfied with the headlines and the principal facts; as, for instance, they knew that the German submarines had sunk American merchant ships with loss of many American lives. They knew that after a lull, such sinkings had begun again. They felt, as did we young men of draft age, that the United States had done the only thing it could do in defending its own people. They probably missed such fine points as the German Ambassador's statement that our Government did the only thing it could do when it entered the war.

It is to be hoped that Mr. Murray's disillusionment with propaganda has resulted in his now sticking to facts, such as I have quoted, and forgetting high-flown theories.

Doubtless other readers wept, as I did, over his closing sentence. The picture of him struggling in the ruins of what should have been his future is terrible.

The South Side boys of his age that I knew have, to fully as great an extent as their fathers, contrived to make good livings and support their families with greater comforts than the previous generations. Here, at least, we seem to have had an advantage over the West Siders, who, if Mr. Murray is typical, were defeated in life's struggle by the same courageous and intelligent fight which disposed of the German menace of 1917.

Body And Soul.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Mr. E. M. Stephens in The Post of August 7 takes me to task for my letter of August 1. He says I "misinformed an old man seeking spiritual advice," when I said the body was only the house in which we live.

I do not wish to enter controversy with the gentleman but all Christians agree that the soul is immortal and that the body is only the outer shell or habitation of the soul, which is of God.

In First Corinthians will be found these words; "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost?" Then in John 2:21 will be found these words: ". . . he spake of the temple of his body."

Man's soul is housed in the body till such time as it has served its day and generation when the two part company—the soul goes to God the body to the ground.

Airports For Defense.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The Camp Springs airport bill should be passed at this session. It is a national matter, not merely a civic one. In fact, it is a matter of national defense, as all commercial airports in time of war immediately become units for defense, and the next war will be fought from the air.

Washington is now open on all sides to attack, with Bolling Field a wash-out and the commercial airport a death trap, impossible to remedy or cure. Both of these airports are too close to the city and are surrounded and hedged in by too many hazards to be at all effective as fields for defense.

More On The South Chicago 'Massacre.'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

It is not my desire to carry on a controversy in your "Letters to the Editor." However, I do feel it necessary to answer the letter published in your issue of August 6 signed by Baldwin Adams.

In the first place, I wonder what we may infer by Mr. Adams' statement in the first paragraph in his letter expressing the sentiments of "all noncapitalists and non-Fascists in America." In other words, just how does he class himself? One cannot help but wonder if he means to infer he represents the Communists.

It was quite in line with the Communists' policy to endeavor to make martyrs of the armed mob defying law and order in Chicago against recognized law-enforcing officials. The defense racket of the Communists is well known. I am advised that a financial statement issued by the International Labor Defense covering the Scottsboro case alone showed receipts of $61,825.23 for the period from April 11, 1931, to August 31, 1924, which means that an average of over $15,000 a year was collected by this defense committee, which is only one of many. In fact this defense racket is so lucrative that it was reported recently, after the conviction of three Communists for murder, that two of their attorneys were fighting over the handling of the appeal.

Returning, however, to The Post editorial on the Chicago "massacre," simply let me quote from a statement made by Senator Josiah W. Bailey, of the United States Senate, referring to the case:

"The police were dealing with an armed mob, proceeding to a plant where peaceful men were at work. The police warned the mob as required by law. It would not yield, but continued in an attitude of menace. Missles were thrown. A shot was fired. Then the conflict. A mob must disperse upon orders from police authorities. Peaceful citizens expect peace officers to maintain the peace. They were charged with the duty of employing all the force necessary. The assembly was manifestly unlawful. It had gathered for an unlawful purpose, to wit, to invade the property of others, take charge of it and expel workers from their posts of duty. It was armed with deadly weapons. The police had no choice; they had to uphold the law; to resist the mob and disperse it. It was their duty to protect peaceful citizens at their work—in their right to work. They exhausted peaceful methods, and then met force with force. They are not responsible for the consequences, but the responsibility rests clearly upon those who were proceeding outside the law. If blame must be imposed for the bloodshed, it must be imposed upon the mob that resisted the law and made bloodshed unavoidable. To take any other view is to impose upon the guardians of the law condemnation for doing their duty, and to encourage the lawless accordingly."

In closing, let me join Senator Bailey in quoting a clear statement of the elementary law upon these matters by a distinguished North Carolina jurist, the Hon. N. A. Sinclair, supporting a judgment of his court in a recent case:

"The strikers do not have a right to intimidate or obstruct or annoy an employe going to and from his work, or while he is actually engaged in the work, nor do they have any right to invade or trespass upon any property or premises of the employer. It is the duty of the police authorities to protect every man in his right to work. If any member of the law-enforcig authorities refuses to furnish such protection, he would be amenable to the law and subject to prosecution for neglect of official duty."

Loyal American citizens throughout the entire land are awakening to the absolute disregard for our laws, our officials, our courts and our Government on the part of a certain radical element who may or are being used to promote revolution in this country. These loyal Americans demand in no uncertain terms that our laws be enforced and that our domestic tranquillity guaranteed under the Constitution be again assured by our law-enforcing officials. J. A. HALL.

Your Watch.

I TOOK my watch to Henry today. Whenever I drop it from the tenth story, or leave it on my wrist while I'm in swimming, or some other slight mishap befalls it, I take it to Henry's little repair shop for a thorough going-over.

"Smatter now?" Henry growled, as I approached his workbench.

"I don't know, Henry; it just stopped without notice."

"Drop it? Let the dog play with it? Play catch with it?"

The questions came quickly. To each I shook my head in a vigorous negative, but Henry looked suspicious.

During the cross-examination he had adjusted one of those funny-looking jewelers' monocles to his right eye, opened my wayward timepiece, and unblushingly exposed it from the rear.

"Great guns! The dirt! Or is it alemite?" he asked sarcastically.

"Listen," I protested, "you think I'm crazy?"

Henry refused to commit himself, but merely grunted and said, "I'll have to go over it thoroughly. Come back in a week."

"Judas priest, Henry," I protested, "I could have a locomotive gone over in that time."

"Yes," he retorted, "and if your watch had had half the care a locomotive gets, you wouldn't be here."

"Izzat so?" I said brilliantly.

"It is. It's darned funny," he went on, "how you fellows mistreat your watches and then have the nerve to growl about performance. What do you know about a watch, anyway?"

"Well," I said testily, "I know that they treat accuracy with light-hearted indifference. I know I missed a date with a peacherino because that darned watch . . . I know——"

"Rats!" Henry cut in. "Let me tell you something about a watch.

"In the first place manufacturers of high-grade watches know what sort of thing watches are in for, so they try hard to prepare 'em for a terrible life.

"Take the question of temperature. Ordinarily, metals are affected by differences in temperature, expanding with the heat and contracting with the cold. Marked contraction and expansion of the metal parts of your watch might cause it either to drag along in 'low' or race in 'high.' So the manufacturer puts it through various tests designed to keep it from showing a disregard for accuracy.

"Another thing: There was a time when even very good watches would run slower or faster in one position than in another. Today a watch is tried out in five different positions before it leaves the factory with an O.K.: on the right and left edges, flat on its face, on its back, and suspended from the stem. Some manufacturers even test it out in a sixth position—with the head, or stem, down.

"Moreover," Henry went on, warming up, "good watches are tested for isochronism and——"

"I-sock-and-run-ism! Gee, Henry, that's kind of tough on a watch, ain't it?"

* * *

Henry gave me a pitying look. "Nothing at all to do with assault and battery, nor with men's hose," he explained with patient tolerance. "Simply means the uniformity of rate at which a watch will run throughout the 24 hours after it's been wound. If they're not tested for isochronism, likely the rate'll vary between windings.

"Believe it or not," he hurried along without even stopping to apologize for this bit of plagiarism, "watches, like human beings, have their peculiarities. Your watch may keep excellent time for you and mine for me, but if we should exchange timepieces both might get a little fussy. Maybe it's the difference in the way we walk, or body magnetism, or both."

"Say, Henry, they're temperamental," I ventured soothingly.

"Yes. Did you ever stop to think how much work a watch does in a day, measured in ticks?" he asked suddenly.

Henry loftily ignored this bit of cleverness. "Well," he said, "a watch ticks five times to the second, 300 times to the minute, 18,000 times to the hour, 432,000 times to the day, 157,680,000 times to the year. Furthermore, unless you take it to a repair shop within a year after you buy it, it does all that ticking on less than a single drop of oil that the maker puts in it."

"Oil's cheap," I ventured timidly; "why not"——

"More oil would gum the works," he answered witheringly. "Of course," he continued, "I'm foolish to tell you this, but a watch should be taken to a good repairman at least once a year. If there's anything wrong with it, it's wise to catch the trouble in its early stages, just as you try to catch a disease in its incipiency. If some of you fellows would just follow that one simple rule you could save yourselves some large 'watch-doctor' bills—and keep from missing dates with peacherinos."

* * *

"Say, Henry," I said earnestly, "I'm going to take your advice. After you've fixed that little old ticker this time, I'm going to bring it back within a year for inspection, so help me."

Henry smiled cynically. "That's exactly what they all say," he remarked. "It'll be ready within a week. So long."

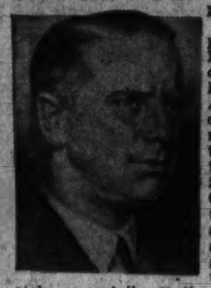
Fair Enough

By

Westbrook Pegler

Said John L.—Doe.

PAUL ANDERSON, who does Washington for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, recently had an important interview with one who, from certain indications may be visualized as a man with bushy eyebrows and prognathous chin.



"Availing himself of the precedent established by the President himself in laying down the regulations for his press conferences," Mr. Anderson wrote, "this executive took the role of 'Administrator Spokesman for the C. I. O.' This suggests that the "Administrator Spokesman" occupies in the C. I. O. a position equal to that of Mr. Roosevelt in the administration, and the total authority of his remarks gives me strongly to suspect that the statements accurately present the sentiment of John L. Lewis. Mr. Anderson sent me a copy of his story with a note saying:—"Peg, I realize that you are beyond redemption, but you may retain the grace to punish yourself by reading a few salty truths, you unreconstructed bum."

So I have read the salty truths and find the "Administrator Spokesman" of the C. I. O. acknowledging a serious breach between John L. Lewis and President Roosevelt and further find it impossible to imagine anyone who could commit John L. Lewis to this position but John L. Lewis himself.

That, however, is mere deduction, not positive information, although I imagine that Mr. Roosevelt, who is pretty shrewd about such things, will attribute the threat to the same authority.

• • • •

FOR THE INTERVIEW does contain a threat and some glaring and mane-shaking which may be compared to the most arrogant moods of Mussolini himself.

The "Administrator Spokesman" who, in the absence of absolute identification, will be referred to as "John L. Doe," reminds the President that the United States Mine Workers alone contributed $500,000 to his last campaign, and bitterly resents the President's refusal, after long temporizing with the riots of the C. I. O., to indorse these methods.

The interview bespeaks a belief on the part of John L. Doe that in return for the $500,000 and the C. I. O.'s votes, the President should have helped Mr. Doe to bulldoze unwilling Americans into the ranks of the C. I. O., to occupy plants by the sitdown method and to promote commotion with mobile forces and rioters, as though the C. I. O. with a $500,000 contribution were solely responsible for Mr. Roosevelt's election and owned him outright.

After long hesitation and only when the element of the community known as "The Public" began to go Fascist in the vigilante movement Mr. Roosevelt said, "A plague on both your houses," Danny Roper bashfully said, "The right to strike may be safeguarded, but equally fundamental is the right to work," and Madam Perkins got around to the point of thinking that, perhaps, the sitdown was unlawful.

These intimations John L. Lewis regards as hostility and betrayal in the manner of a man who has authority to speak for all members of the C. I. O., although I know a few who grant him no such authority.

Mr. Doe said, "The mercenaries of the steel companies have murdered 18 of our men, and not one word of condemnation has been uttered from those sources from which we would naturally expect it. It may be true that murder is not an offense against the Federal Government, but it is a moral offense under any government."

THIS SALTY TRUTH assumes, however, that the Chicago police force, which killed 10 of the 18, is a mercenary arm of a steel company, and that a workman driving to work was a murderer when he got a brick through his windshield, lost control of his car and ran down a picket.

It ignores, too, the fact that the peaceful picketeers in South Chicago had assaulted the cops two days before, started the trouble again the day of the killings and, judging by past performances at Herrin, Ill., would have performed a massacre themselves if the cops had not been present to keep them away from the men working in the plant.

Moreover, Mr. Doe's repugnance to murder has quickened remarkably since 1922, when the mine workers butchered 19 unarmed captives, and he merely deplored the tragedy in the formal manner of a statesman, and defended the accused to such effect that nobody was punished at all.

I could belive that his feelings were more moral and less political now if in that slaughter he had expressed himself with less reserve. And there seems to be more of hypocrisy than salty truth in the grievance of a man who inspires people to go out and use muscle to keep other people away from their jobs and, when casualties naturally result, assumes an air of injury and of sympathy for the fallen.

Certainly murder is wrong, but there are those on John L. Doe's side of the fight who insist that it is fair to murder a man who doesn't join a strike. On this important point I ain't reconstructed yit.

The Once Over

The Business Men's Fresh Air Camp.

In response to repeated inquiries about life at our own Fresh Air Camp for Harassed Businessmen, the column is happy to place further facts before the general public today. Everything at the camp is going splendidly, and the miraculous effect on inmates may be best gained from the case of Mr. X and of Mr. Z, two prominent industrialists. After 48 hours in this sylvan retreat, cut off from all Washington news, Mr. X passed a normal breathing test and slept an entire night without crying out in his sleep, "Leggo my throat!"

• • • •

Mr. Z's case was even more extraordinary. Mr. Z, the head of a corporation employing thousands, had to be carried into the camp on a stretcher. He was a complete wreck as a result of NLRB hearings. After three days away from it all, that wild look disappeared from his eyes and he would let strangers approach within 15 or 20 yards of him without breaking for the underbrush.

• • • •

The camp is full of NLRB victims. It is pathetic to watch their arrival. They come in, ghastly pale, weak, staggering and furtive. They trust nobody. Even when Mr. Cassius D. Willowby, camp director, approaches them with his friendly outstretched hands, they take to the defensive shouting, "No more abuse now!"

• • • •

Mr. Willowby takes them by the hand, assures them that the fact that they have built up successful businesses is not regarded here as prima facie evidence they are unspeakable villains, and immediately the glow returns to their cheeks.

• • • •

When they discover all Washington news is cut from the newspapers before the papers reach the camp, that nothing but music can be heard over the camp radio, and that Miss Perkins doesn't even know where the camp is located, their happiness and relief is amazing.

• • • •

It was noticed last week that, despite everything that was done for them, many of the boys seemed a little jump every time a door opened. This puzzled the director until he found they were afraid it was an agent trying to get more orders for that Democratic Convention History at $250 a copy. The director assured them no book agents could reach the camp. (But he is a little uncertain, at that.—Ed. note.)

International Trade

London Observer Sees Lesson For Dictators If Anglo-American Trade Agreement Can Be Completed.

By Commander Stephen King-Hall.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

London.

IT WAS ONE of the mistakes made during the nineteenth century that many of the leading minds of those times, particularly those who controlled the destinies of Great Britain, attached too much importance to the influence which economic considerations were believed to exercise on men's minds and actions.

The war and the post-war years have taught us that "political man" is capable of kicking "economic man" into the background and even on occasion assaulting him with great brutality. The enormous growth of economic nationalism all over the world during the past 15 years, a growth which has reached its most luxurious proportions in Germany and Italy, is the direct result of political confusion and fear.

A national state attempts to become self-supporting and cut down foreign trade to a minimum because its government is afraid of being dependent for foodstuffs and raw materials for industry upon the willingness of "foreigners" to export these commodities.

This political "fear" is reinforced and becomes in my judgment very justifiable when the "foreigners" happen to believe in political theories quite opposed to those in vogue in the state which is trying to be self-contained. A mediaeval baron who disbelieved in or disliked the theory that the king's government should be supreme was behaving logically if he tried to make himself a self-contained stronghold, and the up-to-date castle of the early middle ages was always provided with a most carefully protected water supply inside the inner defenses.

Last Century British Believed In Democracy.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY British were in a sense not afraid of being dependent for supplies on overseas sources, partly because they believed that the democratic way of life was firmly established as the world way of life or was in process of becoming so. But even the liberal-minded gentlemen whose spiritual home was in Manchester deemed it prudent to expend a proportion of their large commercial profits upon a royal navy, two and sometimes three times as strong as any other.

The Italians and the Germans—or perhaps I should write the Fascist and Nazi groups who control the administrations in those states—are being logical in their demands for political control over sources of raw material in order to supplement the supplies they are squeezing out of their home territories. These dictatorship states do not believe in democracy and they do believe in force and aggression. Their leaders even exalt war as a desirable and meritorious method of national self-expression. Such policies are built on foundations of sand for so long as the national existences of Italy and Germany can be jeopardised by an interruption in their overseas supplies.

On the other side of the account we should note that the democracies would be idiots to hand over to their enemies the resources which would assist the dictatorships to dominate the world. One does not present gun-men with loaded revolvers.

Politically, we are faced at present with a deadlock between the democracies and the dictatorships, a deadlock of which the difficulties in connection with non-intervention in Spain are a symptom. How then is it to be resolved?

On the political side only by a war or by a change of heart in Italy and Germany. I think the former solution improbable because neither of the dictatorships is in a fit state to undertake a major war, whilst the defences of the democracies in general and those of great Britain in particular are increasing daily in strength.

The possibilities of a change in the methods of government in Italy and Germany are not out of the question and are likely to be brought about through economic reasons.

Merchant And Profits Not Easily Separated.

ABOUT THREE HUNDRED YEARS ago an Englishman called William Sanderson, who was described as a "Gentleman, Citizen and Merchant of London," wrote that: "Tyme, the truest schoole-mistresse, hath taught all ages that no penalties nor policie, could yet interpose between ye Merchant and his profitt."

Even in these days of exchange restriction, tariffs and quotas and the whole formidable mechanism of state control of international trade, there is much truth in Mr. Sanderson's remarks. The hullaballoo a few months ago in Great Britain over the national defense constitution tax on profits, gives point to this remark so far as domestic trade is concerned.

The profit-making motive, especially if the profit can be made without too much expenditure of energy, is powerfully rooted in human nature, and even the ardent Socialist and perhaps the zealous Communist have been known to investigate the possibilities from a profit-making point of view of "playing the market." Once upon a time the Church Universal frowned heavily on usury as one of the roots of all evil. "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" St. Thomas Aquinas condemned the "lust for gain," and an English bill against "Usurie" said that "Forasmuch as usury is by the word of God utterly prohibited, as a vice most odious and destestable."

However, as society became more complicated on its economic side the profit-making motive found more scope for its activities and probably reached its full flower in the nineteenth century in the days of free trade, and the doctrines of Adam Smith, of laissez-faire and the Manchester school. In the United States it is called rugged individualism.

World Works To Revive Trade Hampered By Itself.

SINCE THE WAR the state has come to dominate economic activity, and today we have the entertaining spectacle of Satan rebuking Sin in the struggle of the democratic governments to revive a world trade which is hampered by their own political activities. Nevertheless, the journeys of M. Van Zeeland (Belgian Prime Minister) and his agent, M. Maurice Frere, round the principal capitals of Europe in order to "undertake preliminary informal investigations in various countries as to the possibility of securing a relaxation of quotas and other obstacles to international trade," is a sign that "economic man" is once more raising his head.

At the present time industrial activity in the world is well above the 1929 level, but the volume of world trade is still about 7 per cent below 1929 figures. An expansion of world trade is imperative if the prosperity on the home fronts is not to be endangered, and this applies particularly to the United Kingdom, which imports nearly one-fifth of the world's exports. And remember, that unless it can be assumed that foreigners are philanthropists, every import is paid for sooner or later by an export, either in the shape of visible goods or an "invisible" service. The United States takes 11 per cent of the world's imports, and it is a highly significant fact that at long last that country has swung over to an adverse balance of trade, as befits a creditor nation.

The fact that Great Britain and the United States are together so significant as markets lends a special importance to the prolonged negotiations which have been taking place in order to pave the way for an Anglo-American trade agreement. In order to make this effective it will be necessary for American industrialists to be ready to see tariffs lowered on imported manufactured goods, and for Great Britain to be ready to accept some American foodstuffs, which must affect the dominion exports to Great Britain.

But, if once the democratic countries can bring about a revival of world trade among themselves, the political results will be far more important than the economic results because an example will be provided of the fact that by democratic methods men of various nationalities can co-operate together for the common good. The democratic world will have marched on a step and the dictatorships will have to seek around for ways and means of participating in this progress. The conditions are simple. They must behave democratically and it remains the task of true statesmanship for France and Great Britain to make this transformation as easy as possible for Italy and Germany without at the same time sacrificing the principles of the democratic faith.

Germany Tightens Her Belt.

THE UNENDING DIFFICULTIES of a planned economy are well illustrated by the drastic measures which Germany is now taking to cope with this year's subnormal grain crop. And the critical situation which confronts the Reich is not less worthy of attention because of the indications that there may soon be a new drive for the regimentation of American agriculture.

National self-sufficiency in foodstuffs has been a cardinal policy in Germany since the outset of the Nazi regime. To the new rulers it was essential that the country should be able to feed itself in the event of another war. And it was also desirable that the foreign exchange normally used to pay for imports of food should be husbanded for the purchase of raw materials unobtainable in Germany.

For these reasons, the Nazi party in 1933 organized the Reichsnaehrstand, or Governmental Food Estate, an organization somewhat similar to our AAA, but of course, not hampered by any considerations of constitutionality. Hitler and his associates have never had to worry about the horse-and-buggy attitude of a Supreme Court. But, as current events demonstrate, this advantage has not liberated them from the operation of natural laws.

STUDENTS OF THE AAA will find the Reichsnaehrstand an interesting subject for study and comparison. It was based on an all-inclusive scheme for crop control and market regulation, with price-fixing powers operating through disciplined commodity groups. In co-operation with the Ministry of Economics it was given authority, over the character, quantity and source of all food imports. A supplementary organization, somewhat akin to Dr. Tugwell's Resettlement Administration, undertook to move urban workers to localities experiencing shortages of farm labor.

The establishment of the Governmental Food Estate in Germany coincided with a season of record crops, largely planted before the Nazis came into power. This laid the base for a marked increase in livestock production. By the end of last year Germany counted nearly 26,000,000 pigs, as against less than 23,000,000 at the end of 1932. The same period showed increases of about one million head in the number of cattle and sheep respectively. In addition, some 250,000 hectares of forest and marsh land were reclaimed for agricultural purposes. Last year it was estimated that 82 per cent of the goal of national self-sufficiency in foodstuffs had been achieved.

But last year, also, unanticipated difficulties of many kinds became apparent. And while these difficulties must not be mentioned in the press, or any political meeting, their existence is made abundantly obvious by the current decrees. These place all grain crops except the small amounts needed for seeding purposes at the disposal of the Berlin government, and establish heavy fines and imprisonment for any German farmer who uses his grain for livestock fodder.

THESE ADMISSIONS of emergency well illustrate what is likely to happen in any rigidly-planned economy, even one as intelligently directed and well co-ordinated as is that now operating in Germany. The program of one arm of the government will be largely, if not entirely, nullified by the conflicting objectives of other equally powerful agencies.

For instance, it is now discovered that the last four years show not a gain but a small net loss in the amount of land available for German agricultural production. New airports and military cantonments, together with the great network of highways built for unemployment relief purposes, have alone largely offset the swamp acreage which has been drained and the forest areas which have been cleared. Moreover, land is now being taken out of cultivation to plant beech forests, since this wood has been found adaptable to the manufacture of artificial wool.

It is not merely that the 250,000 hectares reclaimed for agriculture at great cost have been offset by commandeering of farm land for other purposes. The present German population increase, actively encouraged by the government, is running at nearly 500,000 a year. If self-sufficiency is to be realized this increment alone requires the increased annual food output of some 200,000 hectares.

The government itself admits that such an increase is impossible for Germany. But it is obscuring the issue by propaganda for the return of the former colonies as a solution for the over-population problem. If there is serious food shortage this winter very few Germans will attribute it to the failure of Autarky. The blame will be placed on those nations which show no enthusiasm for restoring Germany's colonial empire.

GERMAN EXPERIENCE is indicating that the difficulties of a planned economy are not confined to those arising between rival arms of the government, but also trace to contradictions within a single agency. After farmers were encouraged to breed hogs it was realized that their fodder was seriously cutting down the domestic grain supplies. People had more bacon but less bread. Now the Food Estate is moving against this, creating the assumption that this winter Germans will have more bread but less bacon.

That is the way it should work out in theory. But here Nature, which has no particular respect for Hitler or any other dictator, is making a disconcerting intervention. The German harvest was bad last year and now it is no longer possible to conceal the fact that it will be even worse this year. Unfavorable weather conditions are largely responsible, but that is no advantage. It merely means that the Nazis are unable to blame the Treaty of Versailles, the economic royalists, the Bolshevik plotters, or any of the customary what-have-yous which form the panoply of alibis in a planned economy.

THERE IS NO QUESTION that the Germans will rally with their habitual courage to confront a grain harvest which will probably yield 10 per cent less than that of last year, itself below average. There is also no question that the economy and efficiency which are alike part of the German temperament will aid the government to confront what may well prove to be serious food shortages this winter.

But even less subject to doubt is the fact that the Nazis are going to be forced to admit complete failure of that program of national self-containment in foodstuffs which was one of their primary original objectives.

The political consequences of this, domestic and international, would be an interesting subject for speculation. There is, however, no room for speculation as to its moral for the full-fledged economic planners. The Germans, with the aid of both brains and bayonets, have brought the science of government planning to a fine art. When their experiments in this line go phut the moral for less experienced laboratory workers is not far to seek.

First Roman Emperor

By William Lyon Phelps

Augustus.

It is fitting that we observe the 2,000th anniversary of Augustus in the month that bears his name.

The first Roman Emperor (and perhaps the greatest) was born 63 B. C., and died 14 A. D. He was a great personality but he did not know that a greater personality was living in his own domain. Some things are hidden from the wise and prudent.

Had he lived until 37 A. D. he would have been 100 years old; hence, 1937 A. D. is the 2,000th anniversary of his birth. You will probably become so confused in trying to work this out for yourself that you had better take my word for it. I have.

• • • •

He had one month of the year named after him, but his unknown contemporary had all months, years, centuries and dates named after Him.

The 2,000th anniversary is being magnificently celebrated, this summer in France, by the reconstitution of the largest known statue of Imperial Rome. In the south of France, where there are such marvelously beautiful specimens of Roman architecture and art—more beautiful, many think, than any to be found in Italy, such as the Pont du Gard, the Maison Carre, various amphitheaters, etc.—there was found sometime ago in the ancient theater at Arles the body of a gigantic statue of Augustus.

Tom McCarthy

A Town Of Just One Building.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, Aug. 7.—A long drive through strange country can be a lot of fun, with congenial company. The drive from Kremmling, Colo., to Salt Lake City was a lot of fun, because Mr. and Mrs. William Johnston, of Haverhill, Mass., who gave me the 400-mile lift, were really congenial company. They were on their way to the Coast to visit their son-in-law.

TOM McCARTHY.

Mr. Johnston and I agreed that if they pulled the gasoline pumps out of some of these western Colorado towns they would be almost exact replicas of frontier towns of 50 years ago. As we went farther west in Colorado, Mr. Johnston opined that they ought to pull up the towns, too, and give the land back to the Indians, if any could be found willing to take it back.

Mrs. Johnston was getting a bit tired of the mountains by the time we reached what I believed was Rabbit Ears Pass, but we all agreed it was a beautiful view. From the pass you can look out over a rich valley; a patchwork of varicolored farm lands.

• • • •

STEAMBOAT SPRINGS was the next large town, and we all had quite a laugh over it, because we couldn't figure out how it got its name. Everything in the town took its name from some portion of a boat. There was "The Pilot" printing office, the "Ship's Bar," and the "Ship's Cabin."

Now Steamboat Springs is some 6,000 feet above sea level, and the little stream which wanders through the town wouldn't float a canoe. We visualized some "mad hatter" pioneer carting a steamboat piece by piece across the mountains, to give the town its name. Mrs. Johnston thought we were just plain silly, but the Mister and myself thought we had something there. We finally discovered that the town got its name from a hot spring which used to bubble up and make a noise like a steamboat whistle.

I've forgotten just where the good road left off, but it was someplace out of Steamboat Springs. There were long stretches of graveled road and some stretches of clay, which had been washed out by recent rains.

After you pass Hayden, the towns are 25 and 30 miles apart and, if you're going fast, you may miss them. People are so scarce out in these parts that they make a showing on the road maps by listing some of the ranches.

Mr. Johnston couldn't understand why anybody wanted to live way out here, where you could drive for miles and not see a house, or a single sign that humans were anywhere present. The herds of cattle we'd passed in the first 100 miles out of Kremmling thinned out as we went further West and, after a while, a stretch of fence was the only indication that some place back in those hills of sagebrush somebody lived.

Mr. Johnston had a tough time with the roads and wondered why they ever called this section of Route 40 a national highway. I told him what I'd heard in Kansas, about describing road conditions. If the inquirer were a Westerner, you told him that the road was splendid and in first-class condition. However, if it were an Easterner, he should be told that the road was almost impassable, in fact, little better than a cattle run. Then he wouldn't be disappointed.

• • • •

AFTER WE PASSED Craig, a fair-sized town, we began to get hungry and examined the map for a place to stop and eat. We drove through a couple of towns without seeing anything like a lunch room . . . seeing, in fact, very little town at all. Finally we set a little town of Cross Mountain as our goal. It must be 35 miles from the village of Maybell to Cross Mountain and, in that 35 miles, we really worked up an appetite.

We had almost driven the distance when we saw a half a dozen small buildings up a side road. We didn't think that could be Cross Mountain, because we didn't suppose anybody would put such a small place on the map. We figured it was a ranch.

A man on horseback informed us that Cross Mountain was a little farther down the road. We drove a few miles without seeing any sign of human life and then, rounding a turn in the road, we arrived at Cross Mountain.

We knew it was Cross Mountain because the sign said so. Cross Mountain had exactly one building! That building was a gray, unpainted affair, looking very much like an outsize packing box, and it housed a family, the postoffice, the general store and serviced motorists by means of a single gas pump. You could look for miles about and there were only endless wastes of sagebrush. And yet the map assured that this was the village of Cross Mountain.

We couldn't get anything to eat there, but we did get gas. As far as we could make out, Cross Mountain had two residents. There was the woman who came out to fill the gas tank and the man who sat on the steps watching her work. We thought he might have been her husband, but he proved to be a visitor.

Cross Mountain rather took Mr. Johnston's fancy, and he got out of the car and asked where the movie house was. The woman and the man both laughed. The woman said that she hadn't been to Craig, the nearest town of more than 100 or 200 people in nine years. She had stayed right there in the one-house village of Cross Mountain for nine years!

• • • •

MR. JOHNSTON ASKED the man if he ever went to the movies.

With the pride of an exile who has known better days, the man shifted his quid, hitched up the knee of his blue denim trousers and answered, almost sadly, "Ah miss the movies." Then he relapsed into silence, looking at us in the pride of proven urbanity.

"Live here in town," Mr. Johnston asked, trying to keep the chuckle out of his voice.

"Live over there, behind that hill," the man said, waving his arm in the general direction of the unbroken waste of sagebrush.

"Sort of do now," the man said, sorrowfully, "what with everybody moving out."

Mr. Johnston didn't ask him where they were moving from, for you could look for miles and see nothing but sagebrush.

Every 10 miles or so, from there on, when we'd see a little cabin back in the desert of sage, Mr. Johnston would chuckle "Everybody's movin' out."

As you drive through that desert of sage in northwestern Colorado, wondering why anybody would choose to live there, you do find some marvelous scenery. It isn't pretty scenery and I don't know that you could call much of it beautiful . . . but it is stark, barren and startling.

As you edge along toward the Utah State line you see, in the distance, soaring buttes of rain-eroded red clay, darkened as though by a veil of black lace, with growths of scrub pine. Huge masses of solid rock rear out of the desert of sagebrush, given a background by the blue sky, heavy with deep white clouds. Here can be found those same freakish formations of rock and soil which distinguished the Badlands of the Dakotas . . . save that here they take less startling forms.

It is something to see and something not easily forgotten, those red or white masses of rock and soil, dotted with a lace of scrub pine, those soaring buttes of red clay, and the jagged masses of rock ground by glaciers into demoniac shapes.

Mr. Johnston had his summary of it. "It's something to see," he said, "but after driving through it for a half a day, and not seeing a full-sized tree, I'd trade any 50 miles of it for a shady street in Haverhill."

TOMORROW: McCarthy arrives in Salt Lake City and goes slightly berserk in an immediate enthusiasm for the Mormons and what they have done.

Paris Banks Agree On Loan to China

Paris, Aug. 9 (AP).—Dr. H. H. Kung, China's smiling finance minister, quietly completed today the second series of loan negotiations on his European tour to reorganize his nation's finances.

A brief announcement said French banker had agreed to help to increase China's reserves in foreign currencies, by placing a special credit at the disposal of the Chinese government. The amount of the loan was not disclosed.

Alliance of G.O.P. And Anti-Roosevelt Democrats Urged

By the Associated Press.

An alliance with anti-Roosevelt Democrats is one of the subjects for discussion at a proposed Republican rally next winter, or spring, leaders of the latter party said yesterday.

They reported some party members favor inviting anti-Administration Democrats to run on the Republican ticket in the Congressional elections next year.

An alternative proposal, that the Republican Party change its name so Democrats may enlist without going under the banner of their traditional foe, has aroused little enthusiasm over the country, some of the leaders declared.

It was said in usually well-informed circles that talk of arranging the national Republican gathering sprang up about the time of Herbert Hoover's recent Eastern visit.

The former President, sightseeing yesterday in Yellowstone Park, made no immediate comment on these reports.

John D. M. Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee, told reporters he was aware of the proposals for the meeting. He declined further comment, however.

The general purpose of the rally, as outlined privately by other leaders, would be to reinvigorate the party and consider tactics for the 1938 elections.

Maryland Legion Honors Fitzgerald

James B. Fitzgerald, attorney, yesterday was unanimously elected vice commander of the American Legion, Department of Maryland, at the sectional convention held in Hagerstown. The new post also carries wth it the presidency of the Southern Maryland Council of the legion.

An active member of the Bethesda-Chevy Chase Post, Fitzgerald was membership chairman of the Southern Maryland District last year. It was in that capacity that he created an all-time membership record which skyrocketed him into the limelight of legion activities.

Fitzgerald is a graduate of Gonzaga High and Georgetown University Law School. He is a member of the Varsity Club, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Forty and Eight, Knights of Columbus and the American Legion. For many years he was secretary and counsel of the Film Board of Trade. He lives at 8 East Underwood street, Chevy Chase, Md.

Landon, '36 Candidate, Selling Chickens Now

The ad gives the telephone number of the tenant's house on Landon's new home site west of Topeka. Landon has sizeable independent oil interests.

8 Nations Favor Monetary Parley

By the Associated Press.

Eight nations have approved and two have rejected a proposed Inter-American monetary conference, the Pan-American Union disclosed yesterday.

The parley was suggested at the Inter-American Peace Conference in Buenos Aires last year. It would "endeavor to bring about monetary stability and the termination of the system of exchange control."

The Pan-American Union was designated to poll American republics on the question of whether such a conference would be opportune at present.

Affirmative replies have been received from Mexico, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Uruguay and Bolivia. Chile and Venezuela have said such a conference would not be opportune.

Although the union dispatched inquiries on the conference proposal last March, answers have not yet been received from the United States, Argentina or Brazil.

Home Is Occupied By Federal Reserve

The Federal Reserve Board, long a step-child housed in bleak Government back rooms and sweltering private office buildings, moved into its new air-conditioned home yesterday, a palatial $3,500,000 palace of glistening Georgia marble.

Wide, spacious, circular stairways lead from the huge lobby in the center of the building to the board room, library and private offices upstairs. Overlooking the lobby are 12 columns, behind which are engraved the names of the cities in which central reserve banks are located. These are Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Richmond, Atlanta, Chicago, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Dallas and San Francisco.

Motifs of Greek coins ornament the walls, while on one side is a portrait relief of war-time President Woodrow Wilson, who is referred to as the founder of the Federal Reserve System.

The Commerce Department said yesterday consumption last year averaged 16 pounds for every person in the country, compared with the former record high of 15.7 pounds in 1929.

Candy production last year was set at 2,054,000,000 pounds, valued at $309,291,000.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Afraid of Ex-Husband's Violence Should He Learn She Loves Another, Divorcee Asks What to Do.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: For five years I was married to a man I divorced last January. I suffered all sorts of humiliation at his hands and even his family didn't blame me for getting the divorce. Now he has repented and wants to be married again. He buys me expensive gifts (which I hate to take) and all he says is: Won't you give me another chance? I believe he secretly thinks I am still in love with him.

* * * *

The truth is I have fallen in love with another man and would like to marry him, but I am afraid of the consequences if my former husband should find out. I have to be nice to him because I am afraid of him. About a year before we were married he suffered a broken neck and although he recovered, apparently, I am sometimes afraid a sudden mental shock will put him completely out of his mind. he is so very queer—not quite normal, mentally.

* * * *

He is around my family constantly (they live a long way from Washington) and does nice things for them and they like him and don't want to hurt him. They don't blame me for getting a divorce, however, although my mother says I should have gone about getting one more gradually, because of his "slow-to-grasp-things" mind. You may tell me to be frank with him; to declare my love for someone else; but if I did, I am afraid my life wouldn't be safe; nor the life of the man I love.

* * * *

I am completely miserable and would like to forget him and live my life as though he had never existed, but I am afraid it is impossible. I would like to introduce the man I love to my family and eventually have a family wedding, since I ran away for my first marriage and my mother never quite forgave me for not taking her into my confidence. I hate to do the same thing over again. But my former husband stays around my family so constantly that I would never dare take the other man there. How do you get a man to forget about you when you are completely through with him and have told him so—but yet daren't tell him you love someone else and plan to be married again? Is there anything you can suggest that will help?

BEWILDERED.

The Things to Do.

DEAR BEWILDERED: You paint a recognizable picture of a certain type of masculine personality. Many another woman has gotten herself involved with such a man to her sick dismay. In my opinion, you must play a waiting game if you are to extricate yourself from your husband's neurotic clutches by peaceable means. Using tact, firmness and a certain amount of frankness, you must wear out his devotion as well as his hope of reconciliation. I should say marriage to anyone else is out of the question for a couple of years, at least, if you hope to attain to it without ugly scenes, threats and possibly violent action on your husband's part.

* * * *

Begin by dealing out the truth in sugar-coated doses. Get the idea firmly fixed in his mind that there isn't the slightest hope of your remarrying him; but in implanting this idea, don't give him any occasion for feeling jealous of other men. Let it be understood, only, that marriage was for you such a bitter, disillusioning, nerve-wracking experience that you expect to avoid another such entanglement for years to come. Tell him your nerves, your mind, your health, won't stand it. Tell him that freedom, peace, a margin of personal privacy for putting together the shattered pieces of your life, is all you ask now.

* * * *

Better be a little pathetic and whining about the whole thing at times, than consistently cool, collected, belligerent and purposeful. The former attitude may make him a bit impatient, a bit "fed up" on you, whereas the latter attitude may constitute a challenge to impetuous ardor. On one thing be firm—don't accept his gifts. Send them back to him—or hand them back; if delivered personally—with the explanation that your conscience won't permit you to accept gifts from a former husband; that they don't make you in the least happy; that they are unhappy reminders of an unfortunate experience; and that if he hopes to please you, he can better do so by saving his money or spending it on things he needs himself.

* * *

If an exchange of correspondence is under way, break it off. You may have to experiment to discover just how this may be most tactfully accomplished. Try letting his letters go unanswered. If he challenges your silence with jealous, suspicious inquiries (by telephonic communication, say) tell him you are too tired physically, too sick and sore mentally, to write letters; that the effort is too great; that it brings up too many unhappy memories; and that you can't understand why he doesn't realize that everything is over between you anyway. If a prolonged interval of silence brings him flying Eastward to see you personally, let him find you leading a life of lonely but stubborn self sufficiency. If, however, such tactics tend to induce violence, you might adopt the expedient of answering his communications briefly, wearily and non-committally.

* * *

By adjusting himself to the notion that your love life is general—not alone your love for him—is over and done with; that you are fairly committed to a life of dismal monotony; that men are anathema to you; he will be readying himself unconsciously for finding a new emotional interest. I predict that after a couple of years, or even less, of haunting such a grave-side of love, he will turn inevitably to a livelier, warmer, more responsive feminine personality for companionship and consolation. Just now, he has a so-called "fixation" on you, which has nothing particularly to do with your actual qualities of attractiveness. When another image takes its place, he will be less concerned with what you propose to do with your life. If you have the patience and fortitude to wait him out, he may even marry again within two years; and then you will indeed be free.

Tomorrow's Problem

Women Are Warned Against High Heels

Women who stand on their feet a great deal are cautioned to abstain from high, narrow heels in a bulletin on shoes issued by the United States Department of Agriculture.

"Such heels," the bulletin states, "soon run down on one side and frequently gap or pull loose from the shoe. Shoes with high, narrow heels are more readily twisted out of shape than those with low broad heels and are subjected to excessive strain on the seams and to uneven wear on both the soles and uppers."

For Traveling—the New Breton Sailor

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

New York, Aug. 9.

I'M STILL SAD over the Codona tragedy on the Coast. His first wife, the tiny, lovely Lillian Leitzel, killed in Copenhagen five years ago, was one of my dearest friends—I think I admired and liked that amazing little creature as much as any woman I've ever known. And Alfredo himself was unquestionably the most marvelous circus aerialist of our time, and probably of any.

ALICE HUGHES

Little did I know what an ill-starred story was beginning when Leitzel introduced him to me before her Ringling dressing tent over a decade ago! She was a grass widow then, and it was Codona's first season with the big show, and she was daft with admiration for his brilliance in the air—his act climaxed by the triple somersault only he could perform.

I wasn't surprised when I heard of her marriage, and the two most remarkable big-top performers of the day were happy—until that accursed trapeze bar broke in the ring in Denmark, and Leitzel plunged to her death. Then tragedies followed fast. In '33 he himself fell, shattering that lithe body. That was really the end, for Alfredo could never come all the way back—he had lost his touch, his body refused to answer his commands in the necessary split second. Then there was his marriage to his partner, Vera Bruce, which ended so tragically not long ago. And the great Codona was working in a garage when he died—the days of his glory past, and forever unattainable again.

Leitzel rests beneath an ornate tomb in Los Angeles, and Codona has joined her, reunion of two inimitable performers. And Alfred's last note said, "I want to join Leitzel, the only woman I ever loved." Poor couple.

* * * *

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—The local beauty contest winner season officially opened with the arrival of Miss Eloise Brazil, of Dothan, Ala., who is reported here to wear the pulchritude crown of Georgia and Florida as well as her own State. I was delighted to learn that her chaperon, Sister Hazel, is 2 years younger than herself! That's the proper modern trend in chaperons, eh? Miss Eloise applied for a job in the Paradise Night Club chorus "for a lark," and got one, but tossed it back, also for a lark. Both girls had a wonderful time, they said.

* * * *

The big-shot entertainers have been making—and losing—hay at Saratoga. Among those performing there have been Sophie Tucker and Wini Shaw. Dear old Sophie is a film star now, too—of all people . . . I hear that Aunt Ethel Barrymore is coming back to the stage in the fall. After her "retirement." Well, the gal did stay away a whole season, at that!

* * * *

Oscar, of the Waldorf, dug up some 1893 figures for me—read these and ruin your week! The best steak was 24 cents a pound; lamb chops, 18; sugar, 4 cents, and eggs, 14 cents a dozen. Potatoes went for 45 cents a bushel, and butter was 24 cents a pound. Ah, woe is us! But then, in those days, many a papa was earning only $15 a week. Perhaps it evened up—I wouldn't know!

The Dropped Stomach.

By Logan Clendenning, M. D.

"ARE EXERCISES of any benefit for a dropped stomach?" I am asked.

Dropped stomach, once fashionable in the Gay Nineties, has disappeared from diagnosis. Doctors have forgotten all about dropped stomach, just as they have forgotten the instrument for determining uric acid which is accumulating dust on the back shelves of their laboratories. It is part of their equipment, but they don't use it any more than they use their knowledge of the exact year Columbus discovered America. Even chiropractors have almost given up making the diagnosis of dropped stomach.

Of course, it exists, you understand. Just as the skeletons of the dinosaurs exist. But like the dinosaurs, it has ceased to be harmful. To get down to real facts, probably the dinosaurs never were harmful at all; there wasn't anybody around to harm in the dinosaur era. And certainly a dropped stomach never did any harm except to the pocketbook of the owner; it was good for the doctor who treated it, and that's about all the harm and good it ever did.

A little learning is a dangerous thing, and that is what happened when the X-ray came in and it was found that if a person swallowed some bismuth stirred up in milk, the outline of the stomach could be seen quite plainly. The stomach wasn't always in everybody exactly where the anatomy books said it was. It was supposed to be mostly up under the ribs on the left side with its lower border well above the navel. But in lots of people it hung down so that the lower border was at a spot half down the abdomen. This was what was called dropped stomach, or, if you want to be very haughty, you can call it gastroptosis.

And, of course, the doctors were delighted, because here was something that seemed to explain why some people felt bad. They had dropped stomachs, that was what was the matter with them, and the doctors got up all sorts of treatments for dropped stomach. They put corsets on the dropped stomach people, and you could see when the corset was on that the stomach rose clear to latitude 54 point 8, and even sometimes beyond. And they got up diets for it and even devised an operation and slit people open and pleated up their stomachs like a gore.

Then along came some of those disconcerting individuals who pointed out that a great many people had dropped stomach, but they didn't have any symptoms. So they said dropped stomach couldn't really be very serious, and maybe in the patients that had been reported the symptoms were not due to the position of the stomach at all.

And it was found so often that dropped stomach was harmless that finally the conclusion was reached that it doesn't make any difference where your stomach is so long as it does the work. It can be down around your knees, but if it empties, everything will be all right. And that's what doctors think today.

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

IT'S A LOT easier to wave a bland invitation to "come and spend the night" . . . or week-end . . . or even the week . . . than it is to actually accommodate visitors without ending up by hating them one and all. Preparedness is the best policy with regard to summer company. And the test of a visit is not how much the guests enjoys it but how good a time the hostess has.

If the hostess enjoys the visit, the chances are all to the good that the visitor will.

And the first requisite for a good time for the hostess is a good, pleasant well equipped guest room . . . or at least a comfortable detached room where a guest can stay. If a room can't be spared for the purpose, perhaps the sun porch can be made to do double duty, masquerading most of the time as a lounge or bridge room, but hiding the requisites of a guest room behind a formal exterior. A small chest or cabinet can hold stationary, ink and writing pad, an extra blanket, pins, hairpins, a fresh powder puff and toothbrush in cellophane, guest size soap, powder and cold cream. A mirror should be in easy distance and a studio couch should have a good spring and mattress for comfort.

But, of course, a seperate guest room is the nicest if it is available. And we're a great believer in having a closet all decked out in fancy trapping for keeping company clothes slick and fine. Don't forget any of the necessaries mentioned above, but add extra conveniences such as a dressing table and desk if possible, along with a comfortable chair and reading light.

One of the most effective, yet inexpensive, guest rooms we've seen in ages had navy blue shepherd's checked gingham bedspread and draperies with pleated flounce and valance, white walls, white voile curtains and dressing table skirt, red woodwork, red chintz chair covers and hooked rugs with lots of red in them. The furniture here was simple, but if you can't have that just yet, try doing over old furniture in white enamel. But be sure to keep it as shinning white as hospital furniture.

. . . Send a stamped, self-addressed envelope for the writer's bulletin "Direction for Making Curtains and Draperies."

Perfumed Curlers.

Perfumed curlers are one of the gadgets calculated to brighten any girl's outlook on life. The curlers have tubes of scientifically treated rubber which are being hailed by beauty specialists because of their benign effect on the hair, the ends remaining soft and unbroken, no matter how frequently the curlers are used. The tubes have a permanent scent which imparts the fragrance of fresh roses to the hair.

Proper Dress on Week-Ends Presents Problem to Guests.

By Margaret Wallace.

PROPER DRESS at week-end parties often is a problem to guests. This is particularly true in relation to evening dress. Two young women have written is follows for advice on this subject:

"Dear Miss Wallace: My cousin and myself were guests at a week-end party at a country estate. We took what we considered a proper wardrobe—sport clothes for morning, suitable costumes for church on Sunday morning, afternoon dresses for teas and garden parties, two dinner dresses and an evening dress each. We arrived Friday afternoon and left Monday after dinner.

Guest Puzzled.

On arrival my cousin asked the hostess if she should wear an evening dress as some additional guests were coming in to play cards after dinner. The hostess said "no," so my cousin wore one of her dinner dresses which really would have been suitable for an afternoon dress. I wore a dinner dress with high neckline and short sleeves, and ankle length. When we met in the drawing room for cocktails the hostess and all the guests were in sport costumes such as we had provided for wear in the morning.

The next morning the hostess and the other women guests appeared for breakfast in shorts or slacks. When guests came for tea in the afternoon they all wore sport dresses. My cousin put on an afternoon dress and of course looked overdressed. Luckily I chose a sport dress. Would it be proper to write or telephone one's hostess in advance asking her what clothes to bring?

My mother suggests that we ask the hostess next time, then inquire of her what she intends to wear for a special occasion and follow suit. My mother suggests also, that we describe our clothes to our hostess. Such as, "I am considering wearing a pink sport dress for dinner tonight, or do you think a flowered chiffon dinner dress would be better?" The hostess then will have an opportunity to say "Wear your sport dress; we are not going to wear dinner dress tonight," or "Wear your dinner dress; I am going to wear something on that type."

Advice Often Given.

In large formal households where there are lots of servants the maids usually give the guescts a hint as to the type of clothes they are expected to wear. A well-trained maid will arrive in the room of the guest in such a household when it is time for the guest to dress and will say something like this: "Madame is wearing a dinner dress tonight," or "Madame is wearing a sport costume tonight."

QUERY. Recently I went to a week-end party in the country. The hostess was very careful to tell me that the family lived a very simple life and wore only very simple clothes. I took only sport clothes but, fortunately, tucked in a dinner dress at the last moment. When I came downstairs dressed for dinner in a white silk sport dress all the women, including the hostess, were in dinner dresses of chiffon or lace. I hastily retired to my room again and put on a chiffon dress, although I was late and kept dinner waiting. Would it have been more proper for me to remain in my white silk sport dress?

ANSWER. It was very bad form to hurry off to change your dress after you had appeared where the guests were assembled for dinner. It is always rude to be late for meals.

Warm Bath Found Most Refreshing In Summer Heat

Even though your fancy turns obviously to the frozen wastes of Siberia in hot weather, restrain that impulse to leap into an icy tub. For cooling-off purposes, warm baths are better than cold ones. Cold water may feel more refreshing for the moment, but the net result is circulation. When you have rubbed yourself dry, you'll be just as hot as you were before.

A warm bath, on the other hand, may be delightfully cooling. The water should be only slightly warmer than the body's heat. Stretch out in the tub and, as you relax, work up a good lather of soapsuds. This is important because everyone perspires more than usual in warm weather. More waste matter from within and more soil from without are deposited on the skin. Hence, that uncomfortable, sticky feeling, and unpleasant odors.

When you are clean and relaxed, pull out the stopper and let the cold water flow while the water in the tub runs out. Step out before it gets icy and blot up the clinging drops of water with a clean bath towel. Avoid vigorous rubbing. It may heat you up all over again.

Scolding Child Fails to Solve Sleep Problem

NEW YORK (AP).—Betty is supposed to be taking her nap, but she keeps calling downstairs, "Mummy, is it time to get up yet?"

So she rushes upstairs and announces that if Betty doesn't go to sleep right away, she can't go out and play.

But by that time sleep is out of the question for Betty. Scolding a child who can't get to sleep only makes matters worse, says Mrs. Clara Skiles, head of the New York University demonstration school, in session at the Little Red School House in downtown New York.

There, teachers go on tiptoe during rest periods. They lower their voices. They create an atmosphere of quiet, and the children imitate it. Sleeping problems have been reduced to a minimum.

"Respect a child's rest time," Mrs. Skiles advises the mothers of growing children. "Nothing must interfere with it. Make the sleeping room as dark as possible. Then see that the child is relaxed in mind as well as in body."

Don't awaken a sleeping child, even if the nap hour is up, Mrs. Skiles advises. Let him sleep as long as he likes.

The parental theory that rest means sleep is false, Mrs. Skiles holds. A game may be just as restful for one child as sleep is for another, she has found.

Children—usually up to 8 years—need sleep because they lack endurance. But 8 and 9-year-olds may find a quiet occupation like drawing or reading as restful, and should not be forced to sleep, Mrs. Skiles says. Children themselves know what pursuits are restful.

Brandied Grapes.

In New Orleans, La., famous for its French cuisine, many hostesses serve brandied grapes either as an appetizer or with meats. To prepare, merely clip tender grapes from a cluster, leaving a tiny stem. Put in jar and cover with brandy or whisky. Serve after 24 hours. However they are good as long as you can keep them.

A rich cultural background need not be the exclusive property of college people. Learn a little bit about a lot of things, read some of the world's great books, learn more about the subject that fascinates you most than the average person knows—and you have a practical, working equivalent of a college education.

Our 40-page booklet, "Suppose You Haven't Gone to College," includes a carefully planned reading course of books easily available in inexpensive editions or at your library. Mrs. Wood Will Cruise To Gaspe

Will Be Accompanied by the Garrard Glenns.

Picturesque Peninsula Is Made Popular by Writer.

The Gaspe Peninsula, where most of the natives seldom see anything as frivolous as an evening dress, is the vacation destination of Mrs. Waddy Wood, of Warrenton. With Mr. and Mrs. Garrard Glenn, they will embark Saturday on the Cunarder Carinthie for a 13-day cruise to this picturesque resort.

Gaspe was recently "discovered" by Marvin Breckinridge, formerly of Washington, now of New York, who wrote an illuminating article on its charms. The story was published in a national magazine earlier in the summer, and its author emphasized the simplicity of this resort in the Province of Quebec, with its 500-odd-mile shore drive and its invigorating sea and mountain air.

Shortly after her return to Warrenton, Mrs. Wood will be joined by her talented daughter, Virginia, who will come from New York to spend September with her mother. She has followed in the footsteps of her architect father, and maintains a studio in New York. Last spring Miss Wood held an exhibition of her work at the Paul Reinhardt Galleries, and only a short time ago was awarded first prize in competition with more than 20 artists, all older and considerably more experienced, on a fresco for a Catholic Church in the West.

The Woods are just about the only people in Warrenton who neither ride nor hunt. Although they still call Washingtin their home, they now spend most of their time at Leeton Forest, their residence on Lees Ridge in Warrenton.

Mr. and Mrs. Glenn, who will accompany Mrs. Wood to the Gaspe, are from Charlottesville, where the former is a professor of law at the University of Virginia.

Comings and goings continue to make most of the news in Washington society this month. Entertaining is on a small and informal scale, and there is very little even at that.

Recently arrived in Washington to reside, they have taken the Massachusetts avenue home of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Reed, who sailed last month for Rome, where Mr. Reed is counselor of the American Embassy.

Mrs. B. F. Saul had her daughter, Mrs. Rose Saul Montgomery, as her guest recently at her country home in Kensington, Md. Mrs. Montgomery is now visiting Mr. and Mrs. Laurence Turnure at their home on Long Island.

Miss Rose Foster Hyde, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Hyde, who spent the past year at St. Andrews University in Scotland, will return to New York on Saturday with her grandmother, Mrs. Charles R. Hyde, who also spent the winter in Edinburg. Mr. and Mrs. Hyde are leaving Washington today to meet Mrs. Hyde and their daughter in New York. Miss Hyde will return to Sweetbriar College in September for her senior year.

Belle of London Tobacco Queen

Senorita Rosario de Blanck, who was a belle in London during the recent coronation festivities, will stop for a few days in Washington, en route to be queen of the Tobacco Festival at historic old South Boston, Va., on September 2 and 3. Senorita de Blanck is the daughter of the Cuban Minister to London, Senor Guillermo de Blanck.

The former Miss Westwood Beverley Byrd, daughter of Senator and Mrs. Harry Byrd, now Mrs. Rogers Kern, jr., was the first queen of the South Boston Tobacco Festival. Last year Miss Even-Wardlaw, daughter of Commander A. L. P. Mark-Wardlaw, Naval Attache of the British Embassy, was the queen.

Senorita de Blanck will be accompanied here by a chaperon and the Cuban Ambassador at Washington, Senor Pedo Martinez Fraga, will go with her to South Boston. At the ceremonies there the senorita will be presented with a gold tobacco leaf, suitably inscribed, as a memento of the occasion.

She is now in Cuba and will fly from there week after next to Washington. Here she will be welcomed by Senator Byrd and other officials. Among her first duties will be to visit the White House and present an invitation to the festival to the President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

Rep. O'Day Will Fly To New York Today For Scout Jamboree

Representative Caroline O'Day will fly to New York today to attend the opening of the Girl Scouts International Jamboree, at which Mrs. Roosevelt will be the speaker this afternoon.

Mrs. O'Day is interested in the Jamboree for three reasons. First, she introduced in the House the bill allowing Girl Scouts from other countries free entry into the United States to attend the convention; second, because the affair is being held in Westchester, only two miles from her home, and third, because she is a close friend of Mrs. Juliet Gordon Low, who founded the Girl Scout movement in England. Mrs. Low originally came from Savannah, Ga., Mrs. O'Day's former home.

Maj. Chi-Han Chung and Mrs. Lingoh Wang, of Nanking, China, have arrived in Washington and are at the Shoreham for a few days.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Documentary evidence, in music and pictures of the value of the work of Resettlement Administration was presented to members of the American Association of University Women yesterday afternoon at their informal tea at the clubhouse. Edwin Locke and Charles Seeger talked on the story of "America Today," as recorded in music and photographs, and Miss Margaret Valiant, also of the Resettlement Administration, sang several folk songs of the South.

"We find it possible through these photographs to show one-half of the country how the other half lives," said Mr. Locke. "We can show the life of the people we are helping and of those whom we desire to help. The camera, in the hands of a person aware of the social significance of the pictures he is taking, offers the best possible record for the study of authorities and the information of the public on conditions with which we have to deal."

Mistaken Theory.

Mr. Seeger told of the original plan of the Resettlement Administration to take to the people of the rural communities music of a kind which met their needs. The popular opinion that America has little interest in music is a mistaken one, he averred. Not only do the people welcome the music offered them through the Resettlement service, but, in turn, they contributed a fund of ancient ballads brought to this country from England and handed down for generations—songs familiar in outlying districts but little known among city dwellers."

Miss Valiant, who presented two appealing spirituals, herself is from the Deep South and knows not only how to reach the people of that section with her singing, but also how to garner from them their rich fund of folklore and songs.

Mr. Steger played phonograph records of various old ballads, illustrating the different interpretations given them by people in widely separated sections and also by the old people and the young, whose singing showed the influence of contact with modern jazz.

Members View Exhibit.

The club members viewed the exhibit of photographs after the program and asked questions of Mr. Locke regarding them. He explained that landscapes seldom were included in the collection as the people, the homes in which they lived and crafts by which they earned their meager livelihood were of greater significance. One face can tell a whole story, he pointed out.

The program was one of the most interesting the club has had this summer. Mrs. John B. Walker was in charge for the day and was assisted in receiving by Dr. Louise Stanley. Other hostesses, who presided at the tea table, were Mrs. Robert Delvin, Mrs. Colvin Whittaker and Mrs. Marshall Harris, who is chairman of the teas for the season.

Among those present were Mr. Rodney Dutcher, of the N. E. A.; Miss Mary Taylor, editor of the Consumers' Guide; Mrs. Edward Costigan, Mrs. Nina Allender, Mrs. Catherine Wallace, Mrs. Jean Dougherty and Mrs. Seeger, who were guests of Mrs. Walker; Mrs. Noel V. James, of Columbus, Ohio, who was there as the guest of her daughter, Mrs. Ormand E. Demorest, and Mrs. Eldon Dummit and Miss Rosemary Dummit, of Lexington, Ky., the guests of Mrs. Harris.

Next week there will be a musicale in connection with the tea.

Unity Council Plans a Picnic

Daughters of America to Go to Pinehurst Next Sunday.

Unity Council, Daughters of America, has set next Sunday as the date for its annual picnic at Pinehurst. This council made the second largest gain in memberships last year and will seat the officers at the coming State sessions.

The Past State Councilors Association has accepted the invitation of the State Council to conduct the special memorial service at the State Council sessions September 15, 16, and 17, in memory of the late past State councilor, Emily E. Haliday. The association also will participate in the public installation ceremonies at the State Council convention September 17 at the Mayflower Hotel.

Capital Organizations Continue Activities Despite Summer Weather

Mrs. Lundeen Is Hostess to The 73d Club

MRS. ERNEST LUNDEEN, wife of Senator Lundeen, of Minnesota, yesterday was hostess to members of the Seventy-Third Club and a group of other friends at an all-day picnic at her home. A week ago the club was entertained at the Wardman Park by Mrs. James Meeks and Mrs. John M. O'Connell and, if Congress continues in session, there may be more outings before the Congressional wives return home, but no definite plans have been made for future meetings.

Mrs. Robert L. Ramsay leaves today for her home in Follansbee, W. Va. The other members of the club who have remained this long through the summer heat expect to stay to the "bitter end," but not a minute longer. Conversation yesterday was devoted to plans for a prompt exodus from the Capital when Congress adjourns. Trunks are packed and bags ready for leaving at a moment's notice.

Mrs. Lundeen had arranged various forms of entertainment for her guests including croquet and quoits. No one pitched the horse shoes however. The day's heat was the excuse and several guests promised to return another day, wearing shorts, to try it. Croquet, bridge and anagrams were the popular games. The horse shoe grounds served only as the scene of the luncheon. Small tables were placed there beneath the trees.

Among the guests were Mrs. Pat McCarran, Mrs. Meeks, Mrs. O'Connell, Mrs. Herman Kopplemann, Mrs. Ramsay, Mrs. Otha D. Wearin, Mrs. Martin Smith, Mrs. Edward Eicher, Mrs. Jennings Randolph, of West Virginia, and her daughter, Mrs. H. F. Carr, of Detroit; Mrs. Mark Wilcox, Mrs. J. Buell Snyder, Mrs. John A. Martin, Mrs. Laurence Imhoff, Mrs. Brooks Fletcher, Mrs. Clarence Turner, Mrs. Thomas F. Ford, Mrs. Fred Biermann, Mrs. Monrad C. Wallgren, Mrs. Delmar Brubaker, of Minnesota; Mrs. William Morrell, Mrs. John Graff, Mrs. Edward Corneady and Mrs. Oswald Schutte.

Columbia Heights Art Club Circles Globe for Programs

Founded at Turn of Century, Organization Has Limited Membership; Officers Follow in Mothers' Footsteps; Scotland Next Year's Topic.

SOME OF WASHINGTON'S most interesting clubs are those which were organized at the beginning of this century and have continued almost as they began with a limited membership, the same type of program and daughters following in their mothers' footsteps as members and officers. One of these is the Columbia Heights Art Club, established in 1899.

Its first president was Mrs. Martha Lemon Schneider, who served until 1903, the year the club was federated. From the time it started the Columbia Heights Art Club has devoted its meetings to the study of the culture of this and other countries. It has practically circled the globe in its cultural research by the book-shelf route for its programs. Last year Holland was the subject of study, and every other week at the meetings on the first and third Thursdays, one member read a paper on the art and another on the history of the country.

Already many in the club membership are reading up on Scotland in preparation for the coming season's programs. These are so arranged that each member participates in the meetings at some time during the year, in preparation and reading of a paper as a hostess or assistant hostess and as a program chairman. There are never guest speakers. The programs are "of the members, by the members and for the members."

Several years' study was devoted to the culture and history of the United States; six years were spent going around the Mediterranean, giving a comprehensive view of the sections under discussion.

Mrs. Mahlon A. Winter is now president of the club, with Mrs. Charles K. Hoover, vice president, Mrs. Joseph R. McCuen, recording secretary; Mrs. George A. Cook, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Raleigh Gilchrist, treasurer; Mrs. George Peckham, press reporter, and Mrs. Cornelia Hill, director to the District Federation.

On the executive board are Mrs. Winter, Mrs. Elmer S. Frazier, Mrs. Hoover, Mrs. R. Bruce Bare, Mrs. Gilchrist, Mrs. McCuen and Mrs. Dudley S. Bright.

Mrs. Charles Grandfield, mother of Mrs. Cook, is still an active member, as is Mrs. S. W. Morris, mother of Mrs. Bright. Mrs. J. Edson Briggs, an associate member, is the mother of Mrs. Charles Hoover.

The late Mrs. Sarah A. Wolhaupter, who twice served as president of the club, was the grandmother of Mrs. Elmer S. Frazier, who preceded Mrs. Winter in the presidency. The late Mrs. Sarah J. Croissant, who also was among the early presidents of the club, was the mother-in-law of Mrs. DeWitt Croissant, who served as president in 1922 and 1923. Mrs. John W. Frizzell, a past president, 1918 to 1920, also has served as president of the D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs.

Other past presidents were, in addition to those mentioned, Mrs. Emily Hyde, Mrs. Evelyn Clark Morgan, Mrs. Elizabeth Ayers Stokes, Mrs. Ellis D. Logan, Mrs. Augustus Knight, Mrs. Edward D. Hardy, Miss Cornelia Hill, Mrs. Arthur Seaton, Mrs. Anton Heitmuller, Mrs. R. Bruce Bare and Mrs. Mary Nalle.

Several former members who were active during their residence here felt so attached to the club as to retain an associate membership after leaving Washington. Among them was Mrs. Z. M. Heisler, who moved to Emporia, Kans. Two members changed this year from the active to the associate list, Mrs. Samuel Swiggett and Mme. J. S. Coutinho.

Active members are Mrs. Bare, Mrs. Bright, Mrs. Cook, Mrs. Croissant, Mrs. Ernest Daniel, Miss Anne Darlington, Mrs. Frazier, Mrs. Frizzell, Mrs. Grandfield, Mrs. Ernest Gude, Mrs. Robert Hibben, Mrs. Charles Hoover, Mrs. Heitmuller, Miss Hill, Mrs. McCuen, Mrs. Robert McFall, Mrs. A. B. McManus, Mrs. Morris, Mrs. Nalle, Mrs. Peckham, Mrs. Frederick Pratt, Mrs. Edward Russell, Mrs. A. Rogers Tracy, Mrs. Winter, Mrs. A. T. Williams, Mrs. Lou P. Woodruff, Mrs. T. H. Mitchell, Mrs. Gilchrist and Mrs. M. H. Forhman.

"Madame Chairman" . . .

By Suzanne.

Ah! A new organization! The mothers-in-law down in Amarilla, Tex., under the leadership of Gene Howe, Amarillo publisher, have started the National Association of Mother-in-Law Clubs. If Washington hurries, it probably can have one of the first clubs in the national association. Mrs. Nellie Donald, Mr. Howe's mother-in-law, is one of the incorporators and directors.

The association's aims are high. It plans to "preserve the American home, provide for the dissemination of such information as may prove to be educational and advantageous in the preservation of ideals that have historically clustered about the American home, and support benevolent, charitable, educational and missionary undertakings" — the D. A. R. could scarcely do more.

Of course, the membership is somewhat restricted. One must be a mother-in-law . . . so we can't all qualify. Also one must never joke about mothers-in-law. There may even be a move to pass a law against jokes about mothers-in-law. This offers a "cause."

There can be study groups on how mothers-in-law should treat their sons and daughters-in-law, and how children-in-law should treat mothers-in-law. There could be cheery little plays dealing with domestic life in which mother-in-law could be the heroine.

The music department could promote contests for songs about mother-in-law; the literature department could encourage the writing of poems and essays on the subject and the art department could sponsor a movement for pictures similar to Whistler's "Mother," entitled "Mother-in-Law."—Think of the opportunities for program-building!

Dorothy Fletcher Howerth, an active member of the Washington Wellesley Club and treasurer of the Women's National Press Club, returned not long ago from a motor trip through the Pennsylvania mountains and a visit in Bellefonte, known as "the home of the governors," and is now in the midst of her writing.

Since 1926 she has been writing for newspapers and magazines principally on nature subjects and is one of the staff writers of Better Homes and Gardens. Beside that, she is an accomplished musician.

SANDY SPRING has another club which is active and important to the community in addition to the Women's Mutual Improvement Association, which has the distinction of being one of the oldest in the country. It is the Wednesday Club, organized in 1906. It has a membership of 50, and meetings are held every two weeks from October to May. It started as a literary club but has branched out in community service including aid in the support of the dental clinic and assistance in the T. B. work. Last year it was responsible also, for the transportation of 85 children to the children's concerts presented by Hans Kindler.

Mrs. Howard C. Boone, president of the American War Mothers and a resident of Washington, is now in Europe as a delegate to take part in the dedication of American war memorials abroad. With others of the American delegation she landed at Havre and went to Paris by a special boat-train. Accompanied by Miss May Pershing, sister of Gen. John J. Pershing, who is chairman of the American Battle Monument Commission, the party was welcomed at the station by Lieut. Col. Horace Fuller, U. S. military attache; Capt. Francis Cogswell, U. S. naval attache; Capt. Mark M. Boatner, officer in charge of the Paris office of the commission, and a group of Paris veterans. Representatives Lister Hill, Charles A. Eaton and J. Walter Lambeth also are among the delegates.

HELEN ROBICHAUX, who appeared as soprano soloist on frequent occasions at the luncheon meetings of the Democratic League of the District last season, is not neglecting her music this summer despite the warm weather and the lure of swimming at the beach. She presented a recital on a recent Sunday evening at the Freund Studio House, 5313 Sixteenth street, with Edna Lee Freund as her accompanist and a large group of friends in the audience.

In addition to singing for the Democratic League, she appeared on the programs of the Daughters and Sons of the Confederacy, the Central Business Men's Association and the Lions Club last winter and also sang at St. Thomas' Episcopal Church for several months.

Jane R. Cox Boomed for Legion Post

Group Also Arranges for Installation Ceremony in October.

Jacob Jones Post, American Legion, discussed plans for participation in the coming Department convention at its session last night in the Thomas Circle Club. Its chief interest in the meeting this season will be support of its post commander, Miss Jane R. Cox, for the office of second vice commander of the department, on the ticket headed by Lieut. Thomas Mason, of the Second Division Post, for department commander. Last year Miss Helen Opitz, also a member of the post, served as second vice commander of the department.

The convention opens Thursday with sessions in the ballroom of the Mayflower Hotel. Jacob Jones Post will take part in the parade the opening night. The 30 or 30 members of the post in the line of march will wear their Yoemanette uniforms with black shoes, hose and ties, white shirts and white gloves, or if not in uniform, they will wear white dresses and shoes and their legion caps.

The post's own members will carry its colors, a distinction in which it takes pride, as both in washington and elsewhere many of the women's posts have their colors carried for them by a member of one of the men's units. The color bearers are Mrs. Dorothy Graham and Mrs. Bertha Johnson.

The post last night also planned for its annual installation of officers which will take place in October at the Washington Club. Miss Belle K. Graves is the unopposed candidate for post commander to succeed Miss Cox and will be voted on at the September election.

Jacob Jones Post's large membership dwindles so far as actual attendance at meetings during the summer is concerned. Despite the heat, however, 40 or 50 are present at the monthly sessions and the post continues its philanthropic work. There is no summer recess.

Money which was raised by a bingo party at the home of Past Commander Elsie Pinney two weeks ago is to be used for buying underwear and sunsuits for children at Glen Dale Sanitarium, many of whose parents are unable to afford the clothing necessary for them. Mrs. Lillian Sawyer, chairman of child welfare, announced to the post last night what garments are most needed.

Reorganization Denounced as Treasury Peril

Congress Lacks Power to Safeguard Finances, Says Brookings Report.

By the Associated Press.

The Brookings Institution last night contended reorganization proposals by President Roosevelt's Committee on Administrative Management would give Congress no power to protect the Government against illegal or irregular expenditues.

In a pamphlet, the institution criticized a suggestion by the President's committee that Congress receive an audit of Federal expenditures after outlays have been made.

It quoted Mr. Roosevelt's committee as saying that once Congress had made an appropriation, responsibility for its expenditure should devolve upon the President. Congress would receive a subsequent "independent audit made by an independent auditor who will report promptly to the Congress his criticisms and exceptions" to actions of the Executive.

Eastman Scores Bill.

"The postuadit of expenditures by an agent of Congress would give Congress no power to protect the Government from loss occasioned by illegal or irregular payment," the institution said.

Earlier, Joseph B. Eastman, member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, said three safeguards placed around the commission by Congress were threatened by the Robinson reorganization bill.

Eastman told the Senate's special Reorganization Committee that the threatened safeguards were: Basing actions on records obtained at public hearings; bipartisan nature of the commission; long, staggered terms for members.

He declared certain "dangerous and ill-advised recommendations" had been made by the President's reorganization committee and carried over into the bill.

Eugene O. Sykes, acting chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, objected to transfer of the commission's appointive power.

Other Opposition Voiced.

William A. Ayers, chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, told the committee that transferring the appointment power would "hamper" the commission.

"There have been administrations in the past out of harmony with the commission," he said. "There is a possibility of such administrations in the future. Such an administration might impair or thwart —even render the commission helpless."

R. C. Fulbright, of the National Industrial Traffic League, opposed any transfer of "administrative" functions from the nterstate Commerce Commission. Edward S. Brashears, representing the Association of Practitioners before the I. C. C., told the committee that the association's members voted 100 to 1 against the reorganization bill.

H. Lester Hooker, of Richmond, chairman of the Virginia Corporation Commission, urged the committee to exclude interstate commerce, Federal communications, Federal power and securities and exchange commissions from the effects of the Robinson bill. He appeared as a representative of the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners.

Western Union Bars Strike-Backing Unions

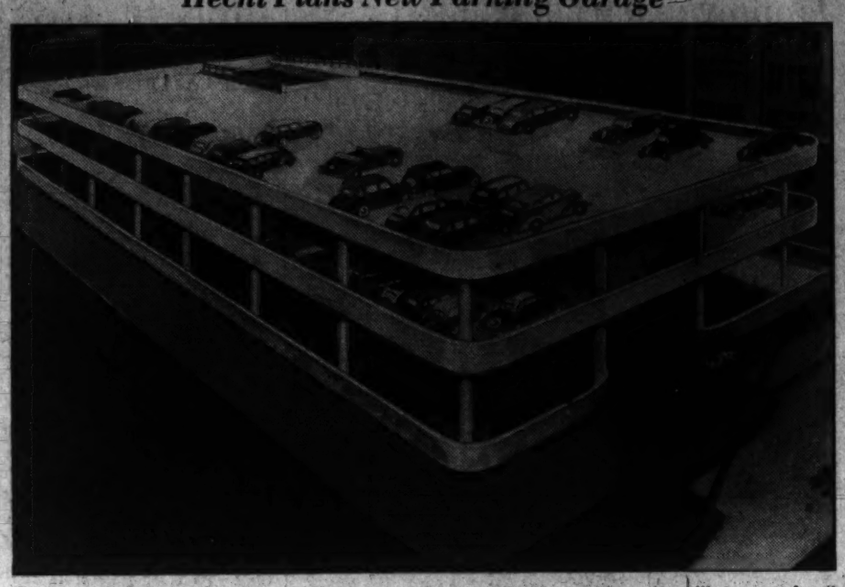
Seattle, Aug. 9 (AP).—Newcomb Carlton, of New York, chairman of the board of Western Union, testified at a National Labor Relations Board hearing today the company is opposed to employe affiliation with unions which condone strikes, because of its desire to keep service unimpeded.

The hearing was called at the request of the Seattle Telegraph Messengers Union, which seeks to have itself designated the bargaining agency for boys employed here.

Georgian, Wife Killed, Feud Slayer Wounded

Baxley, Ga., Aug. 9 (AP).—Isham O'Quinn, 45, and his wife, Bertha, 35, died in an exchange of gunfire in a neighborhood feud today and Miles Whitted, 40, the man who shot them, was wounded, Sheriff H. L. Padgett said tonight. The sooting was a climax to a year of quarreling between the O'Quinns and the Whiteds, which had its beginning when the cows of one family broke into the field of the other, the sheriff declared.

Hecht Plans New Parking Garage



Ground has been broken for a new and modern parking garage, to be erected adjacent the Hecht Co. establishmen on the corner of E street at Sixth northwest, according to announcement made yesterday by George M. Quirk, vice president and store manager.

The new structure will be built of reinforced concrete and will provide 51,000 square feet of improved parking space, sufficient to accomodate 1,200 cars daily, the announcement states.

Cars will be driven to the upper stories by means of specially constructed ramps, thus enabling attendants to give quick and efficient service. A waiting room for the convenience of customers will also be built within the structure. The architecture will be of the newest, streamlined, curved-in type. Special sidewalk-ways on the ramps will be constructed for the convenience of employes.

'Iron Lung' Fails To Save Youth

Hot Springs, N. Mex., Aug. 9 (AP). Charles Hunt, 24, Los Angeles infantile paralysis victim, died tonight after he was believed saved from death by an "iron lung," mechanical breathing devise.

Dr. H. B. Johnson said death was caused by weakening of the heart muscles.

"The respirator breathed for him," the physician said, "but could not perform the functions of the heart."

Hunt, automobile worker, was rushed here to the incomplete Carrie Tingley Hospital for crippled children Friday night from El Paso, where he was stricken.

Douglas Predicts 'Flying Wings' as Planes of Future

Los Angeles, Aug. 9 (U.P.).—Donald W. Douglas, who operates the world's biggest airplane factory, today predicted that the plane of ten years hence will be a fantastic "flying wing" that will carry 100 passengers and tons of baggage.

Hall L. Hibbard, of Lockheed Aircraft, who designed the world's fastest commercial transport, agreed with Douglas that airliners will shed their tails. He estimated that the "flying wing" will travel 500 miles an hour and span the country in about six hours."

Finsler's Comet Cuts Big Dipper's Handle

Cambridge, Mass., Aug. 9 (AP).—Finsler's Comet swung tonight through the handle of the Big Dipper, its mammoth head and two flaming tails radiant in their maximum brilliance.

Harvard astronomers reported it could be best seen in the Northern sky at midnight, and would begin its declination about Wednesday. The comet, discovered July 4 by Dr. P. Finsler, a Swiss mathematics professor, tonight reached the third magnitude and was easily visible to the naked eye. Scientists explained the sixth magnitude was the smallest object that could be viewed unaided.

Golfer's Case Delayed.

Los Angeles, Aug. 9 (AP).—Golfer John Montague, wanted in New York for alleged participation in a roadhouse robbery, appeared in court today on a fugitive complaint but the hearing was postponed until August 18 because Gov. Frank F. Merriman has not ruled on Montague's extradition. It was the second postponement for the same reason.

China Has Bought 20,000,000 Gallons Of U.S. Oil Report

Los Angeles, Aug. 9 (AP).—The Los Angeles Examiner said tonight it has learned "nearly 20,000,000 gallons of aviation gasoline was contracted for here today for the Chinese government."

Officials of oil companies in southern California declined comment on the reported contract, which would be the largest of its kind in the history of the California oil basin.

"The record order, financed by English gold, is to be delivered in Shanghai at the earliest possible moment," the Examiner said.

By the Associated Press.

Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 9.—Believed by its makers to be the fastest in the world, a new photographic lens has just been completed, taking pictures of light rays which left distant stars before dinosaurs trod the earth.

In conjunction with the 100-inch reflector at Mount Wilson, the largest existing telescope, the new lens has photgraphed spectra of nebulea 30,000 times fainter than the faintest star visible to the unaided eye.

Recent data has placed these nebulae at an estimated distance of 80,000,000 light years from the earth, Dr. Humason said.

The lens, designed by Dr. Wilbur B. Rayton, head of the company's scientific bureau, is described as six and one-half times faster than the fastest "candid camera," with an F-1.5 lens. The speed of of the new lens is F-0.59.

The light scooped up by the huge 8 1-3-foot telescope mirror is concentrated by the Rayton lens into a streak 2-25 of an inch long on a photographic plate which measures only 1 by 1½ inches.

This streak is a spectrum, or analysis of the light. From it, Dr. Humason determined the nebulae are running away from the earth at a speed of 26,000 miles a second, a little less than one-seventh of the speed of light itself.

Dr. Humason said the work was being done to verify the theory of William de Sitter, Dutch astronomer, that the universe is expanding and that the recessive velocity of nebulae is proportional to their distance.

S. E. Business Men Indorse New Bills

The Southeast Business Men's Association last night went on record favoring legislation compelling applicants for marriage licenses to show doctors' certificates certifying they are free of veneral diseases.

At the meeting, held at 314 Pennsylvania avenue southeast, resolutions also were adopted favoring the Camp Spring, Md., site for the proposed new airport, the Fort Davis site for the new Naval Hospital, an item in the next District budget providing for a new Pennsylvania avenue bridge over the Anacostia River, and a request for additional traffic lights in the Southeast section of the city.

U. S. Studies Claim Nazis Plan Chain Of Training Camps

By the Associated Press.

Justice Department officials studied behind closed doors yesterday a growing pile of complaints that a German-American organization is establishing a chain of Nazi military training camps in the United States.

Prominent among the complainants was Representative Citron (Democrat), Connecticut, who sent the State Department "hundreds" of protests from private citizens against continued operation of Camp Nordland, Nazi outdoors establishment at Andover, N. J., and other alleged Nazi encampments. State Department officials forwarded the complaints to the Department of Justice where a rigid censorship was clamped on their contents and on the department's intentions. It was recalled, however, that at a recent press conference Attorney General Cummings told newsmen he was not investigating the Nazi encampments "very actively."

Since the press conference, however, it was indicated that additional material had been received and referred to Assistant Attorney General Brien McMahon.

On Capitol Hill, meantime, Citron told newsmen that one complainant charged that 17 Nazi training camps had been established in the United States under the guidance and sponsorship of German consulates. He said that members of the Nazi party were violating Federal laws by shipping firearms interstate from one training camp to another.

President Considers Black Hills Fishing Trip

Bober, nationally known for his experiments with alfalfa, visited the President Sunday at Hyde Park, N. Y. In his wire he said the President "will try for a vacation there next summer to try his luck of trout fishing."

Bailey Opposed By Rep. Miller In Senate Race

By the Associated Press.

The self-assembled convention repudiated the recent action of the State Democratic committee, which rejected petitions for a party primary.

Miller was nominated by acclamation. His was the only name considered at the meeting, which showed on its roll call names of representatives from 46 of the State's 75 counties.

Introduced by C. A. Walls, nephew of Senator Robinson, Miller asserted:

"I am ready to go with you in this battle to restore to the people of Arkansas what is justly theirs and what is about to be taken from them."

He said tonight his name would go on the special general election ballot as an independent.

Republican leaders have indicated they would not make a bid for the post.

Miller, 49-year-old advocate of flood control tied in with river development by reservoirs and dams, has been friendly to the New Deal. He is a native of Stoddard County, Mo., and has been in Congress six years.

Power Grab Angle In Flood Plan Hit

Hampton Beach, N. H., Aug. 9 (AP). Gov. Francis P. Murphy (Republican), New Hampshire, tonight denounced a United States Senate resolution that would reserve to the Federal Government power rights in New England flood control projects and urged insistence on Congressional ratification of the compacts in their present form.

In a statement issued here the Governor voiced his agreement with Gov. George D. Aiken (Republican), Vermont, that no New England State should call special legislative sessions to ratify compacts to be drawn up in conformity with the Senate resolution, introduced by Senator Fred Brown (Democrat), New Hampshire, and described by him as an Administration measure.

"I am very definitely of the opinion," Gov. Murphy said, "that New Hampshire's people never will surrender the natural resources of their State in return for any assistance that the Federal Government may give in conection with flood control."

CAPT. HARRY S. RANDALL.

Capt. Harry S. Randall, 61, who was a familiar figure in the pilot house of excursion steamers that took a Washington of another day to outings at River View and Colonial Beach, died Sunday at his home, 836 Sligo avenue, Silver Spring, Md.

A native of Washington Capt. Randall was the son of Capt. Ephraim S. Randall, founder of the Potomac River Steamboat Line.

Raised practically in a pilot house, the young Harry S. Randall won his pilot's license at the age of 21 and took command of one of his father's boats. Among the steamers of the line, the names of which will recall many joyous and happy hours to older Washington, were the St. Johns, the Arrowsmith, the Wakefield, the Harry Randall, the Estelle Randall, the Samuel J. Pence, the Mary Washington and the Louise Randall.

The Estelle Randall, first propeller operated boat on the Potomac, was a mail boat. In the blizzard of '98 when river traffic was paralyzed young Capt. Randall carried the mail in a sledge hauled by his shetland ponies.

He commanded the concrete boats built in North Carolina in the World War, bringing them to Washington for inspection. One of these boats still operates to Fort Washington.

Capt. Randall has been a supervising engineer at the War Department for many years and recently has been connected with the National Park Service. He was chosen to supervise the central heating plant for the Federal buildings in Washington but found the steps too difficult for his aging legs.

He has been ill several months.

He is survived by his wife, a sister, Mrs. James F. Carlin, who was Estelle Randall after whom the mail boat was named, and two sons, Harry E. Randall, jr., and Maryland State Policeman Paul J. Randall.

Funeral services will be held from the residence at 11 a. m. today with burial in Holy Rood Cemetery

Teacher to Fight Ouster Attempt

Waynesburg, Pa., Aug. 9 (AP).—In a one-room country schoolhouse, Mrs. Laura Elms Morris, rural teacher, will defend herself tomorrow night against charges of incompetence and cruelty.

The veteran instructress, mother of two children, was dismissed by the four farmers and a mechanic on Whitely Township's school board at nearby Kirby. She denied the charges and invoked Pennsylvania's new teacher tenure law in a fight for her job.

Charges by Gene Jones, sixth grade pupil, that Mrs. Morris was "always telling us we descended from monkeys," were expected to be investigated at the hearing.

Film Actors Boycott Brown Derby Cafes

Hollywood, Aug. 9 (AP).—The Screen Actors' Guild, which embraces practically every film player here, stars included, today began a boycott of the Brown Derby Cafes, where a culinary workers union struck Friday. The strikers demand a closed shop.

Harrisburg Asked To Aid Job March

Harrisburg, Pa., Aug. 9 (AP).—State officials of the Workers Alliance were arranging today to house and feed 3,000 jobless marchers they said would stop here overnight August 21 on their way to ask Congress for more WPA jobs.

Harrisburg will be the last overnight stop, alliance officials said, for one of four columns of marchers who will invade Washington in what is termed a "national job march." Delegations are expected from as far west as Seattle, Wash., and Portland, Oreg. The marchers will converge on Washington August 23.

Man, 121, Wants Wife Who Has Yellow Hair

New York, Aug. 9 (AP).—When centenarian-plus Abraham Wishovsky blows out the 121 candles on his birthday cake tomorrow he will wish for "a young, pretty wife with yellow hair."

The aged Polish-born retired grocer has already buried three wives, and divorced two. The party will be at the Home of the Daughters of Jacob, in the Bronx, of which he is one of 500 residents, all men and women over 65. He says the women at the home don't appeal to him.

Chandler Forces Lead in Kentucky

Louisville, Ky., Aug. 9 (AP).—Hubert Meredith, Greenville, held a commanding lead tonight over Francis M. Burke, Prestonsburg, for the Democratic nomination for attorney general as candidates indorsed by Gov. A. B. Chandler made almost a clean sweep of last Saturday's Democratic primary.

Chandler-sponsored candidates for 16 of the 19 seats being contested in the Senate appeared certain winners on the basis of incomplete unofficial returns. The administration also appeared to have a safe margin in the Democratic contest for 100 House seats.

Plea to Roosevelt Hits Raskob LaJoyaPurchase

Albuquerque, N. Mex., Aug. 9 (AP). The Tribune said today a petition has been submitted to President Roosevelt protesting sale of the 216,000-acre La Joya land grant to John J. Raskob, of New York, and Thomas W. Campbell, Montana wheat king.

The Tribune said it learned the protest was based on the contention that the land—from an old Spanish land grant—is tax-free under terms of the Guadalupe Hidalgo Treaty with Mexico, and therefore Raskob and Campbell were unauthorized to obtain title by payment of $76,000 back taxes at a county land sale. The petition said 1,700 inhabitants of the grant will be thrown onto Federal relief by the purchase.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

I doubted from the start the theory that Doris, the Shoreham's beautiful cigarette girl, had been drowned, with her famed gliding gait she could walk on water . . . It would be fascinating to see the burghers of the District win the right to vote, if only to see how many voted for the Administration . . . Not merely this Administration; any Administration . . . The Roosevelt china, it seems to me, is handsomer than any Presidential dishware in 100 years.

• • • •

Why do the conservative Senators get such savage glee from mispronouncing Sidney Hillman's name? . . . If there were only incidental music with the speeches, the Senate gallery would be a better place to relax than a movie.

• • • •

A little boy spotted Senator Hattie Caraway on the floor of the Senate the other afternoon and exclaimed: "Is that the teacher?" . . . While listening to debate, Senator Walsh paces back and forth something like a caged lion.

• • • •

If you get completely worn out by entertaining once or twice a week, think of the Roosevelts and relax; they have guests virtually every evening . . . Senator Berry reminds me of a football coach after the first half with his team one touchdown behind; very dour.

• • • •

I'll bet my Sunday pants that the tax evaders will find loopholes in the loophole plugs . . . Is it true that at a Washington party a stenographer who takes dictation has social precedence over a typist? . . . And how does an elevator man rank with a messenger?

• • • •

Well, a lot of Chinese who might have died in a defense of Peiping are still alive to make faces at the invaders . . . Some bosses, of course, have a hazy notion that the new wage law will make it illegal to pay more than $16 a week . . .

• • • •

Of thee I sing: Of Government men who skillfully calendar a 30-day annual leave so they can be gone 32 days . . . Of the lovely daughters of officials who dote on Washington's glamorous life and therefore marry foreign diplomats and go to live in Bulgaria. . . . Of tourists trying to find room to park on a street marked every 50 feet "No Parking at Any Time" . . . Of the earthenware whatnot on Mr. Roosevelt's desk, and of gentle hostesses who bury bottles with flowers protruding from them in their gardens, to enchant their heedless guests who can't see 'em after the second drink.

• • • •

Nostalgia in the Mayflower lobby: Two bellhops discussing the best way to plow a cornfield . . . The discount allowed official bigshots by their hotels often scarcely pays for the soda water . . . I missed Lewis Douglas, the ex-director of the exbudget; if he were still here riding his bike to work, maybe I'd muster courage to do it too.

• • • •

Questions to which I may never know the answer: Did Mr. Roosevelt phone Mr. Garner to come back and pick up the pieces? . . . Which ambassador phoned the State Department and said he was tired of pickets cluttering up the sidewalk?

• • • •

Some day I'd like to walk down the corridors of the Department of Agriculture, catch Mr. Wallace's men off guard, thrust bouquets of rye, wheat, barley and oats beneath their noses and ask them to identify which was which. (Half the people in the farm States can't distinguish them apart.)

• • • •

Hinterlanders say they feel a little fuzzy for a few days after coming to Washington; old Washingtonians declare it's the low level and the heavy atmosphere that's to blame. Maybe it's atmosphere pressure and not the pressure of public opinion that's responsible for some of the acts of the lawmakers . . . Definite sign that Congress is going home sooner than it thinks, whether the members want or not: some of their wives have begun to pack.

Attorney Assails Referenda Scheme

Attacking legislation planned to provide for "advisory referenda" on District legislation, John P. Mullen, local attorney, last night called such legislation "the death blow to the aspirations of all who have worked for an effective franchise in any form."

In a letter to Representative Jennings Randolph (Democrat), West Virginia, Muller attacked H. R. 8146, introduced a week ago by Representative Palmisano, which would provide for advisory referenda by District citizens. The referenda would be taken at the Commissioners' discretion and would not be binding.

Mullen asserted that if the Palmisano bill is enacted, "the people will be so thoroughly disgusted with its attempted utility that further desire for the ballot will surely pass away. Charaterizing the bill as an "obnoxious proposal of Mr. (Commissioner) Allen," he called it "an implied indictment of the intellects of local residents."

Meeting Will Consider D. C. Suffrage Tonight

A "conference meeting" to make plans for obtaining suffrage for the District will be held tonight at 8 o'clock by the Citizens Committee for Progressive Action at Wesley Hall, Connecticut avenue and K streets.

At the open meeting, discussion will concern subjects brought up at a mass meeting held two weeks ago at the Sylvan Theater, on the subject of suffrage for Washington. Carl Gerber will preside at tonight's meeting.

4 Steps Taken for Safer Traffic In D.C.; Bill Would Abate Noise

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Four major steps—including action on Capitol Hill—were taken yesterday toward Washington's goal of a new highway safety record.

Representative Albert E. Carter (Republican) of California, introduced a bill in the House making it unlawful to "create or cause unreasonably loud, disturbing and unnecessary noise in connection with the use and operation of motor vehicles in the District of Columbia."

The District Court of Appeals upheld authority of the Commissioners to revoke or suspend driving permits for traffic infractions.

Inspector L. I. H. Edwards, acting superintendent of police, in a formal order to members of his command, stressed the importance of reducing accidents and demanded "vigorous and relentless" enforcement of all traffic regulations.

Following a survey of New York's anti-noise methods, Representative Carter joined Washington's safety efforts by offering legislation designed to prohibit the use of an automobile horn except as a necessary warning measure.

"Washington has traffic regulations on this subject at the present time," said Carter as he introduced the bill late yesterday, "but they are so loosely drawn as to be practically of no effect."

Mayor LaGuardia of New York, Carter told the House, attributed a marked decrease in accidents to Manhattan's rigid noise abatement campaign. A major part of any safety move is the control of horn blowing, said Carter. With New York police enforcing anti-noise laws, traffic mishaps have dropped from 40,000 to less than 28,000 annually, figures show.

Noise Harms Health.

"Many of the leading cities of America and Europe," Carter declared, "have conducted studies as to the cause and effect of city noises. The findings are conclusive as to the deleterious effect on health, efficiency and traffic safety. We should try to make Washington, upon which the eyes of the Nation are always focused, a model city in every feature."

Violators of the bill's provisions would be guilty of a misdemeanor, with a penalty of not more than a $50 fine or imprisonment of not more than 60 days, or both.

Powers of the District Commissioners to revoke or suspend permits after traffic convictions were drastically strengtened by the Court of Appeals ruling. The court held the Commissioners or their designated agents may, with or without prior hearing, revoke or suspend a driver's permit for any cause which they or their agents may deem sufficient.

Alfred M. LaForest, whose permit was suspended in January, 1936, after a speeding conviction, contended the local regulation was unconstitutional because it vested legislative powers and unregulated discretion on administrative authorities.

Hazen Hails Decision.

During recent months, the permit suspension system has been attacked at least five times. LaForest, however, was the first to take his case to the Appellate Court. Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen hailed the court's decision as a boon to the current traffic safety movement.

"The revocation and suspension of permits," he said, "is one of the greatest weapons we have against highway recklessness. Now offending motorists will know they must pay for their negligence."

The hazards of horn blowing on traffic-congested streets were also cited by Inspector Edwards. He told precinct commanders:

"A large percentage of the motorists try to observe the regulations and it is the remaining few who disregard the rights of others that should receive attention of the police. The motorist who drives through the streets blowing his horn to get through traffic without regard to the right-of-way rules, cuts corners in making turns, pulls from one lane of traffic to the other, drives on the left side of streets to pass a line of autos, is a menace to the public and should be dealt with accordingly."

Lights, Vision Blamed.

Edwards stressed the importance of enforcing regulations governing double-parked commercial vehicles and urged policemen to warn pedestrians against crossing street between intersections and against red signal lights.

"It is necessary to have the full co-operation of the public to successfully enforce any regulation or law," Edwards pointed out. "Therefore, traffic regulations must be enforced firmly but courteously and with discretion; not spasmodically but consistently and continuously."

Elgen, veteran chairman of the P. U. C., listed three contributing causes to traffic mishaps:

1. Dazzling headlights.
2. Improperly lighted streets.
3. Defective vision of persons in the middle-age class.

"Wholesale arrests and spasmodic safety campaigns," he said, "never will reduce greatly the city's traffic fatality toll. What we should do here is to get the underlying cause of each accident and then work out a cure."

Elgen has been a student of accident statistics for many years. He advocated a regulation compelling motorists to drive with dim lights through city streets. Washington's many trees, he said, tend to diminish the effect of street lights.

Real Estate Man Held for Larceny

William W. Jordan, real estate dealer, was arrested by Detective Sergt. Herbert Wanamaker last night on a warrant sworn out by Francis J. McGeon, of 4230 Essenden street northwest. Jordan was charged with larceny after trust, the amount involved being $1,000.

McGeon told police that two months ago he had given Jordan $1,000 for a lot; the money also was to cover a start on construction of a house. Police say they have received other similar complaints.

Armed Man Robs Girl and Youth

Six months' savings from his meager salary as a drug store clerk —$127—was the loot taken from Willard Hinze, 22, by a holdup man in the park at Twenty-first street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest early this morning.

Hinze, who lives at 824 Eighth street northwest, told police he was sitting in the park on a bench with Naomi Hurst, 20, of 2021 O street northwest. Suddenly a man, who had walked past them and then turned back, drew a revolver and said, "Give me all you've got."

In addition to the $127, the holdup man took a small sum from Miss Hurst. He escaped in a taxicab.

Cab Insurance To Boost Rates, Says Tydings

Independents Oppose Deposit Plan of House at Senate Hearing.

Higher fares must come if there is to be compulsory liability insurance for District taxicabs, Senator Millard Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, said yesterday. He was presiding at a hearing on a bill which provides for compulsory insurance.

Tydings' sub-committee will meet tomorrow in executive session to consider that bill and also a bill to limit the number of taxicabs here.

The insurance bill, already passed by the House, contains a provision permitting the posting of $75,000 with the Public Utilities Commission in lieu of insurance.

Ringgold Hart, attorney for the Diamond Cab Association, told the sub-committee he favored this provision. To show that it was adequate, he pointed out that the highest total of damage claims ever filed against the company was $68,000 in 1934. Diamond has 1,200 cobs.

Representatives of independent cab companies opposed the proposed cash indemnity fund. They argued that if independent drivers had to pay an insurance premium of $25 a month, it would place them at a disadvantage with the Diamond drivers, who would be able to operate indefinitely by each putting up his share of the $75,000 indemnity fund.

Senator Tydings ordered the clerk of the committee to wire 15 of the larger cities for detailed information concerning taxicab insurnace.

Clerk Is Accused Of Gambling Cash From Bad Checks

After allegedly passing bad checks amounting to $330 and losing the money playing the races, William C. Shwetz, 22, 1839 Monroe street northeast, a clerk employed in the Commerce Department, is being held for grand jury action under $5,000 bond on six charges of false pretences.

According to statements made by Shwetz to Detective Sergt. Herbert Wannamaker, who returned the youth from Cleveland, Ohio, where he gave himself up, Shwetb cashed a number of checks in downtown department stores and immediately left for Wilmington, where he lost most of the money.

From there he went to Boston, Mass., thence to Chicago, Ill., and finally to Warren, Ohio, where he played his last 15 cents in slot machines and won $15. He continued to play the machine, according to his statements, and lost the $15 and hitch-hiked to Cleveland.

Trial Board of 3 Civilians Favored

Former District Commissioner W. Gwynn Gardiner, appearing before a House District sub-committee, yesterday proposed a board of three civilians take the place of the police trial board. He said such a change would eliminate "injustice" and prevent destruction of morale in the Police Department.

Gardiner appeared in connection with a hearing on bills to reinstate dismissed policemen—Amos B. Cole, James P. Day, David R. Thompson and Ralph S. Warner.

Representative Bates (Republican), of Massachusetts, said it would be "dangerous" to pass legislation instructing the Commissioners to reinstate dismissed policemen.

Plane Contract Let.

A $554,300 contract for the construction of 15 single-engine amphibian planes has been awarded to the Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corporation, of Bethpage, Long Island, the Navy Department announced yesterday. Bids for the planes were opened July 30.

Impasse Bars Airport Vote This Session

Navy, Agriculture Oppose Improvement of Two Sites.

Government Operation of Present Terminal Proposed.

The inability of Congressional leaders to agree on how to develop an airport for Washington will probably prevent any legislation at this session.

The opposition of the Navy Department to an airport at Camp Springs, near its radio receiving station, has so far prevented passage of a measure which would provide funds for an airport there.

The May bill for the improvement of Washington Airport has been amended to provide that the airport shall pay $25,000 for using the Military road right of way for 25 years. Airport officials say they cannot afford this. The measure, as it now stands, would permit the Secretary of Agriculture to lease 56 acres of the agriculture farm to the terminal "on such terms as he sees fit," but opposition to leasing the land has been expressed by officials of the Department of Agriculture.

U. S. Operation Urged.

Stating that the War Department is considering a proposal to close Military road and permit the right of way to be used by the airfield, Representative Andrew J. May, of Kentucky, acting chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, yesterday said that several members of the committee were opposed to selling the road to the airport. They want the Government to take over Washington Airport," he said, "and develop it as a great commercial airport for the Nation's Capital."

The reason he introduced his bill in the first place, Representative May continued, was to remove the "terrible hazard to human life' which now exists at the airport. "My bill," he said, "as originally introduced, would have permitted action immediately."

Representative R. Ewing Thomason, of Texas, an advocate of municipal ownership of the airport, said that he was opposed to the proposal to sell Military road to the terminal. "The District of Columbia should have the finest airport in the world," he said, "and the time may come when the Government may want to buy the present terminal. The ownership of the Military road would furnish a 'toehold' for the acquisition of the rest of the property when we want to take over the airport."

Other Farms Available.

The objections, voiced by the Agriculture Department, to leasing 56 acres of the experimental farm to the air terminal, were characterized by Representative Thomason as "silly." He pointed out that the Department has stations all over the country, and "could undoubtedly get another experimental farm farther out, but still near the city of Washington."

Support for the proposal to improve Washington Airport was enunciated yesterday by Representative Jack Nichols, of Oklahoma, who was secretary of the Airport Commission which selected the Camp Springs site. He declared that private capital wanted to develop the airport at its own expense. "So far the airport hasn't cost the Federal Government or the city of Washington a cent. Here is the same company which provided the airport in the first place ready to make it a fine field if Congress will only give them permission to do so."

Representative Nichols declared that the officials of the airport and of Arlington County had reached an agreement on the question of Military road, and added that the only objection still forthcoming was from the National Capital Park and Planning Commission. He said the commission should be bending its efforts to get the lagoon filled in rather than preventing it. "The boundary channel is unsanitary," Representative Nichols declared, pointing out that studies made by the U. S. Public Health Service had shown that the backwater was polluted with sewage.

LOIS KEMP.

2,300 Others May Have Similar Right to Enroll.

An overwhelming increase in enrollment in the over-crowded junior high schools of the District appeared possible as a result of the United States Court of Appeals decision yesterday that Gordon Junior High School must admit Lois Kemp, daughter of John S. Kemp, of Clarendon, Va.

Lois was excluded by the Gordon school when the school authorities deemed the facilities over-crowded and instructed that out-of-town students be denied admission.

2,300 Others Concerned.

At the time the case was filed last year, it was said to have an important bearing on 2,300 non-residents who have been barred from the District classrooms because of over-crowded conditions.

Through Attorney Robert E. Lynch, a former assistant corporation counsel, the girl brought suit to compel her admittance. She contended that the wording of the statute, "all pupils whose parents are employed officially or otherwise in the District of Columbia shall be admitted and taught free of charge in the schools of said District," did not leave any discretion authority with school officials.

The Appellate Court agreed that the word "shall" was mandatory.

Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal agreed at the time to allow Lois to attend Gordon pending the outcome of the case.

Won in Lower Court.

Last September, before the opening of the District schools, School Superintendent Frank W. Ballou, with the consent of the Board of Education, decided that junior high school admittance would be denied to non-resident students until after the local students had been enrolled.

Kemp, father of Lois, and an official with the Works Progress Administration, won a mandamus from the District Court directing Ballou to enroll the girl. The school board appealed to the Court of Appeals.

Baby's Head Hurt When Automobile Crashes Into Pole

A 9-month-old baby, Marie Macina, was taken to Casualty Hospital, suffering from head injuries, after the car in which she was riding crashed into a telephone pole in the 200 block of Sixty-third street northeast. The driver, Thomas N. Landquest, 36, of Capital Heights, Md., was not held.

"Peck" Henry, 15, of 136 E street southeast, was slightly injured yesterday when bruised by a lamp post knocked over by a falling tree which was knocked down by a car operated by Fred Lewis, 24, of Medford, N. J. The acciden occurred in front of 530 Fourth street southeast. Lewis was charged with reckless driving. The Henry girl was walking along the sidewalk at the time.

Air Station Flood Work Will Resume

Flood control work at the Anacostia Naval Air Station will be resumed in the next few days, Maj. W. D. Luplow, United States engineer for the District of Columbia, announced yesterday. Construction will be undertaken, he said, with funds of $139,000 of regular rivers and harbors appropriations and relief money which have just been made available.

Maj. Luplow said the funds would be used to complete the dike along the Anacostia River, and to construct drains on the landing field to carry away flood waters.

The allotments were made from approximately $45,000,000, provided for rivers and harbors work by Congress and relief agencies.

John Wilson's Body It Still Unclaimed

The body of John Wilson, 56, 523 Sixth street northwest, will be buried in potter's field, police said last night, unless they are able to locate relatives of the dead man, who will claim the body.

Detective Sergt. William J. Liverman, of the homicide squad, said he believes Wilson has local relatives, but so far they have not been found.

Wilson died of natural causes Saturday. His body is at the District morgue but will be buried in a few days, Liverman said. Wilson worked for many year at a downtown department store.

Gene Ford Gets New York Post In MGM Radio

Capitol Manager Promoted to Supervision of All Air Programs.

Gene Ford, who came to Washington in the summer of 1933 to produce the first "Going Native" revue and who returned several months later as producer and manager of the Loew's Capitol Theater, today received from Loew's General Manager J. R. Vogel the happy news that he was being promoted to an important post under Louis K. Sidney, director of the Loew-Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer radio station WHN.

Mr. Ford, who is currently engaged in producing his fifth annual "Going Native" revue, will leave for his new post shortly after this all-local show is presented.

Thus Mr. Ford, whose versatile career includes "hoofing," song writing, producing, directing and theater managing, will now invade a new field—radio—backed by years of experience in show business.

Prior to assuming his present position as Capitol Theater manager, Mr. Ford was a producer at the Capitol Theater in New York, working under the production head, Louis K. Sidney. It was at the request of Loew Divisional Manager Carter Barron that Gene was "loaned" to Washington as manager.

Has Unique Ability.

Because of Mr. Ford's unique ability, his knowledge of production, direction, music, operettas and his writing ability—he having written skits, plays and songs—he will be placed in complete charge of radio programs which Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will shortly produce, featuring the many stars in the M-G-M lots, it was disclosed by Mr. Sidney. The Loew Radio chief, who in a few years' time developed Station WHN into one of the outstanding broadcasters on the airlanes today, also discloses that Metro for some time has been planning its own radio programs in which its stars would be presented in every possible type of vehicle. These programs are now in the offing and complete supervision over them will be intrusted to Mr. Ford.

Gene is a native of Portland, Me. He attended Boston Latin School, Erasmus Hall High School in Brooklyn, and later Brooklyn College. While at Erasmus Hall, he was in the same class with Norma Talmadge. The two often cut classes to secure jobs as "extras" in the nearby Vitagraph studios.

In 1909 he first encountered show business in the form of a position with a small Brooklyn house in which he performed every conceivable duty, except projecting the film. He even played the piano during the showing of the feature. Once a tear-jerker was being featured and he played Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata" but was told by the management that if he didn't cut out the "high brow" stuff and play "Hearts and Flowers" for the sad scenes he'd be fired.

The theater has gone a long way since Gene's first job and he has gone a long way with it. He studied piano under Louis Mollenhauer, brother of the conductor of the New York Philharmonic, and instead of going into concert work became a song plugger for a music publishing house. He worked at this for some time and when his family returned to Maine he went along and played piano for road shows at two Portland theaters.

Returned to New York.

In 1915 he returned to New York and played piano for production rehearsals at the Globe and Broadway theaters. There the "hoofers" taught him to dance. He continued at the Globe Theater, under C. B. Dillingham, as a dancer, was promoted to assistant stage manager and later was made stage manager, a post he held for 11 years. During that time Dillingham produced such hits as "Hitchy-Koo," with Raymond Hitchcock; "Sunny," with Marilyn Miller; "Good Morning Dearie," "Chin Chin," "Jack o' Lantern" and many others.

He next went to St. Louis as producer of musical numbers for the St. Louis Municipal Opera, and in 1925 he was appointed Dillingham's stage manager for the Elsie Janis show, "Puzzles of '25." The next four years were spent as stage director for Producer Ned Wayburn during which time Ford personally directed many vaudeville acts, revues and Junior League shows. This was followed by various production jobs which lead to his association, about nine years ago with Louis K. Sidney's production staff at the New York Capitol.

He has produced all of the annual "Going Native" shows here, three annual all-local shows in Baltimore, and has written much of the music, skits and lyrics for all of these productions, sandwiching in these accomplishments while managing the Capitol Theater here.

Mr. Ford's successor is expected to be appointed shortly.

Nelson B. Bell About The Showshops

Dialogue Is Minimized in Favor of Spectacular Effect in New Tropical Production; Warner Managers Hold Annual Conclave and Day's Outing; New Specialties Added to "Going Native;" "Bojangles" Takes a Short Cut; Notes of the Theater World.

ALREADY the drums are beginning to roll in celebration of the many superiorities to be expected in Samuel Goldwyn's production of "The Hurricane," although that major opus will not be released for national screen consumption until sometime in November.

BELL.

With "Stella Dallas" hailed as an unequivocal masterpiece of film technique, Mr. Goldwyn now is proclaiming far and wide that "The Hurricane" will cause it to pale into comparative insignificance. All signs and portents, at this early date, point to the justification of the producer's optimism with regard to "Hurricane."

To begin with, this story of tropical romance and adventure possesses the prestige of authorship by Charles Nordhoff and James Norman Hall, who established an insuperable precedent for knowing what the cinema is all about with "Mutiny on the Bounty." But "The Hurricane," one is led to believe, will not follow the fixed formula of "Mutiny" or any other typed picture. It will offer innovations in treatment that are relied upon to stamp it as a long step forward in the perfection of the screen's story-telling methods.

Foremost among these will be its economy of dialogue. It is said that the Academy award-winning Dudley Nichols, who prepared the scenario, has flown in the face of dramatic conventionality by minimizing the play's verbiage. Those who have examined it are of the opinion that the script conveys no adequate idea whatsoever of the dramatic forcefulness of the story. It does for the "talkies" what Charles Ray once did for the silents. Mr. Ray was convinced that a silent picture could be made to tell its story without the aid of the then-customary printed titles. Choosing one of the James Whitcomb Riley tales as the vehicle of his experimentation, Mr. Ray proved that he was right and his picture was accepted as a distinct novelty.

Much the same thing was done with the role of O-Lan in the current production of "The Good Earth." With only a scant 70 lines or so to speak throughout the entire length of a feature of "road show" length, O-Lan, as interpreted by Luise Rainer, still contrived to be one of the dominant figures in a play peopled by characters much more verbose than she.

In "The Hurricane," this sparsity of dialogue is said to have been carried to every member of the cast. It is reported that approximately a third of the running time of the picture has been devoted to the savage destructiveness of a tropical storm—from which of course, the film derives its name—in which the roaring noises of a convulsion of nature have been substituted for human colloquies. The rest of the action dedicates itself—or so one hears—to tender romance and spectacular effects of a most amazing nature.

It is interesting in this connection to note that Mr. Goldwyn has allotted something like $10,000,000 to his productional enterprises for the 1937-38 release schedule. Of this sum, $1,500,000 has been plunked into the making of "The Hurricane."

A million and a half dollars will purchase a surprising number of "wind machines," not of the human variety.

So bring on your "Hurricane"—and if the weather man sees this, I am only fooling!

Managers of 39 Warner Brothers theaters in the Washington territory today will converge on the home office of the Warners' local organization in the Earle Theater Building for their annual conference with John J. Payette, general zone manager, and his associate executives. General plans for the new fall season will be discussed at the meeting, at which Robert Smeltzer, Mid-Atlantic district manager of distribution, will outline the Warner production plans for 1937-38. Among the executives who will meet with the managers will be George A. Crouch, assistant zone manager and chief booker; Harry E. Lohmeyer, district manager of the Warner Washington theaters; Guy Wonders, district manager of the Maryland theaters; Nat Glasser, ditto of the Virginia theaters; Frank La Falce, director of advertising and publicity, and Charles E. MacGowan, contact manager. Following today's executive session, the managers tomorrow will be the guests of Mr. Payette at a day's outing at the Annapolis Roads Club, to which the drama desks also are graciously bidden. It will be all right with all concerned if it doesn't rain tomorrow.

Director Gene Ford's latest additions to the cast of principals of the local "Going Native" revue, to be staged at Loew's Capitol Theater late this month, are Gordon Hittenmark, of the National Broadcasting Co.'s forces in Washington, and the George Washington University ensemble of mixed voices. With the addition of these two specialties, Mr. Ford believes he now has gathered together the most talented group of personalities ever to grace one of his all-Washington productions.

The George Washington University vocal ensemble includes undergraduates and alumni of the institution, under the skillful direction of Dr. Robert Harmon. This column feels an especial interest in the G. W. U. singers because back in the old days of the Crandall Saturday Nighters, taking the air over Station WRC, an earlier group under Dr. Harmon's conductorship was a frequent participant in our programs. His leadership of this excellent organization has extended over the intervening years, some 12 in number, if you have to know everything.

Mr. Hittenmark, who last year was master of ceremonies of "Going Native," this season will appear in a specially prepared skit. This year's production will have no master of ceremonies.

There ought to be a moral in this somewhere. It seems that the "Adventures of Marco Polo" set had been in an uproar most of the day responding to the wisecracks of Archie Mayo, the 220-pound director with the 1,000-pound sense of humor. His assistant directors swung into line with their traditional "quiet please," without effect. Finally, Mayo had to come to their rescue in typical Mayo style: "Come on, boys," he shouted, "let's settle down to a bedlam."

No other set in Hollywood, with perhaps the single exception of William Wellman's, ever is so noisy as Mayo's. As good-natured and quick-witted as he is rotund, Mayo encourages levity and considers noise and laughter essential to high morale. He asserts that his experience has taught him that seriousness has jangled more cinematic nerves and ruined more pictures than bad stories. When the set quiets, he worries, points to an actor and says:

"You take over this bit."

Archie Mayo boasts the highest box-office rating of any director in Hollywood and the statisticians can prove it. But you'll have to dig up your own moral—if any.

Bill "Bojangles" Robinson, coming to tap holes in the Earle stage, beginning Friday, years ago invented the word "copesetic." The dictionary people have just got wind of the fact. Charles E. Funk, writing for Funk & Wagnalls, has addressed a letter to Robinson asking information as to the authenticity of the report of his slang inventiveness, when he first used the word, what it means and its generic sources.

This was all very simple for Bill. It appears that whenever he wishes to indicate that something is completely O. K., he uses the word "copesetic" for short!

You're-Telling-Us Note.

Director, Helpers Take Ice Headers

Curiously enough, none of the 80 ice skaters speeding into dangerous dips, turns and somersaults for scenes of Twentieth Century-Fox's "Thin Ice" have fallen during "takes."

This special talent for falling has been restricted to technicians, visitors and Director Sidney Lanfield, with the record in one day of 17 hard contacts with the ice.

Alligator Attacks, Hurts Robert Kent

Required to fall into the murky water of a studio-made African river in which several alligators provided jungle atmosphere, Kent suffered a severely bruised back when one of the reptiles lashed him across the back with its rasp-like tail.

Acclaimed a Show-Girl Champion

The young beauty above, who thinks she sees something on her shoulder, is Dorothy Haas, daughter of a Salt Lake City department store owner, who seems to have a bright future on the screen as a Paramount juvenile player. Miss Haas recently was signed for a big musical attraction now being filmed and immediately won the praises of a representative group of American artists and illustrators appearing on the same lot in Hollywood.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

Hollywood, Aug. 7.—The mental processes of some movie fans leave me completely befuddled. Last night I went to a party. I was the only person there in any way connected with professional Hollywood, but I heard more dirt about stars than I hear in a month around the studios. The fact that almost every tidbit dished out was ridiculously untrue did not surprise me—the thing that made me gasp was the eagerness with which such stuff was poured out—and sopped up—by people who professed to admire the victims.

GINGER ROGERS.

Among other things—most of which are too censorable to be printed—I learned that a girl whom I have known for years uses language so vile that every man on her sets is horrified. Strange—I have never heard that girl use a word more violent than "darn."

I learned that Mr. Bing Crosby is really a "sissy." (Lord, how I would like to see the purveyor of that information say it to the Groaner's face!). I learned that two famous stars are carrying on a scandalous romance. A surprising romance to me, too, for I saw them introduced not more than three days ago. Really, I ought to get around to non-professional parties more often and find out something about these deceitful people. I rub elbows with all day. And I would go—if such scandal-mongering did not give me a feeling akin to nausea.

Guess the psychologists who claim that every human being has a streak of sadism in his makeup must be right. I cannot imagine any other explanation of the unholy joy which so many people take in tearing down the idols that they, themselves, have helped to create.

Had lunch in the RKO cafe, which was jammed to the gun'ales with extra girls who are working in "Stage Door." Blondes, brunettes, red-heads—tiny girls, medium-sized girls, biggish girls! Each one a paragon of beauty—and each one lucky if she earns enough to pay the rent. At a table in the corner of the room sat Ginger Rogers, Katherine Hepburn and Lucille Ball, three young ladies whose only financial worry is the income tax.

In a beauty contest, held then and there, those three would have finished last—and yet any reasonably keen observer would pick them as the outstanding personalities in the room. Beauty is a drug on the Hollywood market. Personality can command any price.

I happened on the Grace Moore set in time to watch the filming of a singing scene and—as usual—felt cheated when I realized that the diva was only going through the motions of singing, moving her lips in time with her own recorded voice. All singing scenes are faked nowadays. The songs are recorded weeks before the shooting of the picture and the canned voice floods the stage while the song-birds emote is broadcast over the loud speaker system. Grace Moore explains the need for such trickery by citing the impossibility of being a great singer and a great beauty at the same moment.

"When I am before the camera," she said. "I think only of my acting and appearance. When I am in the recording room, I open my mouth, distort my face, and let the song roll out!"

Sounds reasonable—but, just the same, it is disillusioning.

Ralph Forbes tells an amusing story about a recent air trip. Just before his plane reached Los Angeles, the stewardess served lunch—a salad and a cup of coffee. As she stood beside Ralph's chair, the plane hit an air-pocket, the dishes flew off the tray and stopped—upside down—in his lap. It was impossible to change suits so, tidying up as best he could, he faced the inevitable airport crowd, with as much nonchalance as he could muster. "I carried it off rather well," he told me, "until I saw an elderly woman clutch her companion's arm and heard her say, loudly and triumphantly, 'Look, there's one of those movie actors now—disgustingly drunk!'

The Roadside

To the edification of a capacity audience come to hiss the villain (churl!) and cheer the hero, right triumphed again last night as the Roadside Players presented the premiere of "The Haunted Mill," fifth production of their current summer season.

Authored by Bernard Francis Moore, directed by Anton Hardt and played to the hilt—and beyond—by the cast of nine, "The Haunted Mill" was served up in a manner which should win many friends. Its inherent melodrama, rich and luscious, is allowed to speak for itself. The characters play their bombastic roles seriously, with a minimum of mustache-curling garnishment.

There are, naturally, the upright lad who loves the elegant lass, the scoundrel who would thwart their matrimonial dream and gain the damsel for himself, the mortgage on the homestead and the simple, ample youth enamored of the spirited maiden in the heroine's employ.

Into the peaceful, bucolic life of the O'Kelleys, mother and daughter, comes that bounder, Squire Corrigan, to wreak his havoc, to wit: Bain Norah's sweetheart on the conk, abduct the beauty, conceal her in the mill and then threaten Mrs. O'Kelley with foreclosure unless she consents to give her daughter's hand in marriage to him.

Thanks principally to Con O'Hagen, whom the program justly describes as a true-hearted lad, the squire's diabolical intentions went awry last night, as they will continue to do during the remainder of the play's run. Con gets his Maureen, Frank Dalton gets his Norah, the lesser villain gets his pardon for squealing, if not repenting, Scotland Yard gets its man, Mother O'Kelley gets a son-in-law, the squire's wronged wife gets her revenge and the squire himself (ss-s-s) gets it in the neck.

If any one of the five young men and four young women who populate "The Haunted Mill" deserves especial mention, it is Fred Haskin, cast as Con O'Hagen. From first curtain to last he is a treat to eye and ear.

Betty Boyers is thoroughly satisfactory as heroine Norah, flouncing and weeping and fluttering with a technique which wins warm response. Ralph Patton, perhaps, is too much on the reserved side to do justice to the hero's role.

Rudulph Justice Watson gives us a villain that would pass muster in any company. His every aside, his unmerciful treatment of the females in his clutches delightfully chill and warm the hearts of his hissers by turns.

In subordinate roles are John Rappolt, Ralph Fowler, Betty Rice, Wilma Flood and Mimi Norton—all deserving of merit badges. A badge, too, to Betty Gray, whose stirring piano accompaniment adds immeasurably to the enjoyment of the piece.

G. G. G.

Old Stuff.

Going to sea "under sail" in the schooner Golden State, which Paramount obtained for its Technicolor production of Robert Louis Stevenson's "Ebb Tide," was no new experience for Ray Milland, one of the principal players. Milland sailed around the Horn on an old three-master, before he came to Hollywood.

I got in by telling the cross-examiner at the door that I was a famous writer named William Saroyan. He wouldn't believe me and claimed I didn't look like a writer. I told him the newest school of writers didn't look like writers. He told me to prove I was a writer, so I showed him a small pencil with a broken point. 'How much money have you got?' he asked. Anyway, I tore into that Clover Club, and in less than 2 minutes I built the fifty bucks up to two. Then I went to the bar, had a beer, and that left me 10 cents, which wouldn't begin to send the hat-girl's brother through grammar school, so I reached into the other vest pocket and gambled again with the fifty there. I had good luck—I didn't lose my health.

Royalty Appears In Film Scenes

King George and Queen Elizabeth of England arriving at Epsom Downs for the English Derby are included on 3,000 feet of film which arrived at Paramount last week from Dr. Eric Locke and a skeleton camera crew, who were sent abroad by Ernst Lubitsch to obtain authentic background and atmosphere shots for his Marlene Dietrich film, "Angel."

Although the photographs of the King and Queen are excellent and will be shown privately at the studio as an informal newsreel, they will not be included in the footage that will be incorporated in the final film, according to Lubitsch.

VENTURI TAKES UNANIMOUS DECISION FROM FURR

The Washington Post Sports

* X WASHINGTON: TUESDAY, AUGUST 10, 1937 15

This Morning

Joe Turner Is No. 1 Wrestling Fan.

By Shirley Povich.

There has been a suspicion abroad in the land for some time now—about a half century—that wrestling is crooked; that the boys have a perfect understanding before they start to grunt and grimace and that, barring the always-to-be-feared double cross, everything eventuates out there on the mat exactly as it reads in the blueprints.

POVICH

But or course, Mr. Joe Turner, who promotes Washington's wrestling shows would never admit that. And you couldn't prove it, either, by Turner's own actions while his shows are in progress. In fact, Joe Turner is his own No. 1 fan and to watch him in a ringside seat out there at Griffith Stadium while his rasslers are having at one another, is to get a terrific jolt.

* * * *

If wrestling is crooked, then Joe Turner apparently doesn't believe it. Either that, or he is a superb actor. He's an old hand at this wrestling business—former middleweight champion of the world, in fact—but for him there is nothing of the hippodrome in it as the athletes grunt and stew and clamp on another torture hold.

* * * *

It may be a far-fetched analogy, but Joe Turner, at one of his matches, goes nuts over a swell scissors hold or an old-fashioned flying mare in much the same manner that an art connoisseur might go into raptures at an exhibit of Rembrandts. He talks of wrestling styles and strategy and strength and deftness and you wonder if, all along, you have been taking this wrestling seriously enough.

* * * *

And so it was, yesterday, that Joe Turner was more than mildly excited when he talked about Bronko Nagurski, Minnesota's reformed all-American fullback, who threw a Minnesota flying block into Dean Detton last June and picked up Detton's status as the most universally recognized wrestling champion of the world.

* * * *

To this department it all had meant that the front-office men of the wrestling trust had simply selected Nagurski as the new champion, threw the Detton match his way with guaranteed results, and hoped to infuse new life into the industry by parading the former football star as a new sensation. You know what their habit has been, how they swap champions whenever there is a lull in the industry.

* * * *

But to hear Joe Turner tell it, to listen as he talked of Nagurski as concert artist might have talked of a new child prodigy, you were amazed at the seriousness with which he treated the Nagurski development. Sure, he was talking for publication, perhaps, but there was something honest and genuine in the way he talked, something of an abiding faith in this wrestling business of his.

* * * *

"That Nagurski may have what it takes to be a real champion," Turner was saying. "Fred Grobmeier was through here last week, and he was telling me about Nagurski. Said Bronko wasn't any flash in the pan, that he actually can beat anybody wrestling today.

"I see where Tony Stecher is his manager, and that's a good sign. Tony Stecher was one of the best middleweights of his day and the chances are he made a smart wrestler out of Nagurski. Grobmeier was telling me he had everything else, is strong and fast and plenty game. If he has learned Stecher's tricks, the scissors, especially, he may be a great wrestler.

* * * *

"We hadn't heard much about Nagurski, but he's no Johnny-come-lately to wrestling, just the same. He's been out there in the Midwest wrestling for three years and he's had almost 300 bouts. You can learn a lot in that time. You've got to have something to do what he's done. The kid has lost only one bout.

* * * *

"And he lost that one to Dick Cox, a darn good wrestler who's liable to beat anybody. That's no disgrace and the way it was told me, Cox only beat Nagurski because he used a trick that Nagurski didn't know anything about. It was one of my old tricks and nobody but a young wrestler could ever get beat with it.

"Grobmeier was telling me how Cox did it. Nagurski was giving him more than he bargained for and had him worn down to a frazzle with those flying blocks. It was in Chicago, I think, and Cox was a big hero out there. He couldn't afford to lose to Nagurski. Anyway, that football player had him in a bad way with a toe hold and the referee ran around to see if Cox's shoulders were on the mat.

"The first thing Nagurski knew he was getting three taps on the back like they always give the winner and he let Cox up. Then he found out that the referee hadn't tapped him; that it was Cox who had reached up and patted him three times. It was a cute trick all right and they'll probably never catch Nagurski again with it, but that night Cox got away with it and then beat Nagurski with a toe hold of his own."

* * * *

And that's how Turner went along, talking of holds and tricks and gameness and strength in wrestling, as naively as if there was nothing of the racket about it and I confess that I began to believe him.

Erickson's Sub-Par 67 Paces Field

By the Associated Press.

San Francisco, Aug. 9.—Banging out a sensational 67, five under par, Don Erickson, of Alhambra, Calif., led at the halfway mark today in 36-hole qualifying trails for the National Public Links golf championship.

Erickson set a new record for the Harding Park course.

The 25-year-old gas company employe snared three birdies on each nine, dropping a 30-foot putt on the eighteenth to grab the lead as slightly more than one-third of the nearly 200 starters had checked in.

He was out in 34 and back in 33. In 1934 he was Southern California Open champion.

Greene, playing for the Philadelphia team and assistant foreman in an automobile plant at Chester, went out in 33 and finished in 36. He missed three fairly easy putts, the ball rimming the cup, for what would have been an even more sparkling round.

Tied at par 72 are Carl Kauffman, of Pittsburgh, National champion in 1927, '28 and '29; Claude Rippy, of Washington, D. C., runner-up last year; Hall Dufour, of Sacramento; John Meier, of Toledo, Ohio; Edward Sams, of Buffalo, N. Y., and Wes Berner, of Portland, Oreg.

Meier, glass plant employe, finished the second nine with 34. He three-putted the first green and dubbed an easy 3-footer on the eighth, but dropped approach shots for birdies on the fourteenth and seventeenth.

Time Out! BY CHET SMITH

If I wasn't so sure about my compass, I'd swear this wasn't Lake Erie.

A touchdown in the last two minutes of play is good for a thrill and so is Harlan Miller's comment in "Over the Coffee."

Mr. Phil Furr Just Couldn't Figure This Business Out!

Armstrong Fights Here On Monday

By Bob Garrison.

Henry Armstrong, uncrowned champion of the featherweight division, yesterday, in a surprise move, was signed to meet Johnny Cabello, Puerto Rican Negro boxer, here next Monday night in the 10-round feature event of the weekly show at Griffith Stadium.

The fight, which will see the 25-year-old Los Angeles battler in his Washington debut, is being promoted by Joe Turner in collaboration with Earl McDonald, local Negro promoter.

Winner of his last 10 fights by knockouts, the sensational West Coast performer who is managed jointly by Al Jolson, famed entertainer, and Eddie Meade, his trainer, is now in the middle of his first invasion of the Eastern rings, which has already included im-

Women's Western Golf Derby Is Paced by Marion Miley's 76

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Aug. 9.—Tall, brunette Marion Miley, of Cincinnati, who scored triumphs in 1935 and 1936 as a Lexington, Ky., lass, made an impressive start toward her third straight women's Western 72-hole medal-play golf derby today by clipping four strokes off par for the Onwentsia Club course with a brilliant 34, 42—76 round.

She was not beyond reach of the field, however, for Edith Estabrook, of Dubuque, Iowa, former Western Junior champion, cracked out a 38, 39—77 for second place. Beatrice Barrett, tall daughter of a Minneapolis professional, scored a 41, 38—79, and was tied for third with Dorothy Gustafson, of South Bend, Ind., who had 37, 42—79.

Tied for the next position at par 80 were Betty Jamieson, of Austin, Tex., trans-Mississippi women's titleholder, and another Texan, Mrs. Dan Chandler, of Dallas. Dorothy Foster, the Springfield, Ill., music teacher, who was runner-up to Helen Hicks in the recent women's Western Open, finished her opening round with an 81, one stroke better than the card of Mrs. Russell Mann, of Milwaukee, the former Lucile Robinson, of Des Moines, Iowa, and two strokes in front of Minneapolis' famous Patty Berg.

Miss Miley did most of her damage on the outgoing nine holes. After knocking down birdies on the second, fourth and seventh holes, she gained two more strokes on the course by sinking an 80-yard chip-shot for an eagle deuce on the eighth. She dropped two strokes coming home by shooting bogies on the fifteenth and sixteenth. Miss Estabrook had birdies on five holes, the first, second, seventh, ninth, tenth and eleventh, and was one over on the sixth and fifteenth.

Miss Berg's trouble came on the greens, on six of which she used three putts.

Twelve Grid Coaches for Navy Squad

8 Officers, 4 Civilians on Staff; Plebes to Start Work August 15.

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., Aug. 9.—Eight naval officers and four civilians will be in charge of football at the Naval Academy this fall under coaching staff assignments announced today by Commander Andrew C. McFall, U. S. N., graduate manager of athletics.

The majority of the officer coaches played on the Navy's championship team of 1926 or on the 1934 team which defeated West Point for the first time in 13 years.

Lieut. Harry J. (Hank) Hardwick, U. S. N., head football coach, who succeeded Lieut. Thomas J. Hamilton, U. S. N., last spring, will be facing his first season in charge of the Navy varsity. For his assistants he will have John N. Wilson, former St. John's College player, as backfield coach, and Edgar E. (Rip) Miller, former Notre Dame star, as line coach. Wilson and Miller are veteran coaches, having worked with the varsity for several years.

Ensign R. C. (Dusty) Dornin, U. S. N., end on the academy's 1934 team, and his teammate, Ensign K. G. Schacht, U. S. N., center, will be assistant varsity line coaches.

Frank Foster, who was head coach of the B squad in 1935, has been given his old assignment. He will be assisted by Marty Karow, former Ohio State player, as backfield coach. Lieut. (junior grade) C. J. Zondorak, U. S. N., will be line coach. He was a member of the coaching staff last season and played on the 1926 team while a midshipman.

Lieut. Oscar E. Hagberg, U. S. N., end and fullback, in the 1928-29-30 line-ups, will be head coach of the plebe squad. Last fall he was in charge of the B squad. Ensign Fred (Buzz) Borries, jr., who won All-America honors by his play in the backfield of the 1934 Navy team, will be backfield coach of the plebes.

Ensign Slade D. Cutter, U. S. N., tackle of the 1934 team, who kicked the field goal that gave the Navy victory of that year, and Lieut. Hugh G. Murrau, U. S. N., captain and end of the 1933 Navy team, will be the plebe line coaches.

The Navy plebes will be called out for football practice about August 15. The Navy varsity players who are returning from a European cruise, are expected back this week. They will immediately go on leave returning early next month when varsity practice begins.

Cabmen Seeking Games.

The Premier Cab unlimited baseball team is seeking games for Wednesday and Sunday. The taxi men have a diamond and can be scheduled by calling Manager Hugh Skinner, at Atlantic 5624-R, after 6 p. m.

Newsom vs. Yanks 'Crucial' Set Opens

Boston, Aug. 9 (AP).—Manager Joe Cronin tonight nominated the garrulous Buck Newsom to open the second-place Red Sox's all-important four-game series with the New York Yankees here tomorrow.

Nine and a half-games back of the league leaders, several of the Red Sockers, who enjoyed a day off today by lolling around Fenway Park, refused to concede they were out of the running.

"Out of it?" said Cronin. "Not a bit. If we could come all the way from sixth place to second during the past month, you can't tell what next month may bring.

"I realize that a tough task we have of spotting the Yanks nine and a half games—but four straight is our aim and we may do it if we can keep getting the breaks."

Nats to Meet Mackmen in Two Games

Monte Weaver, Ed Linke Will Hurl for Griffs This Afternoon.

By Shirley Povich.

The Nats, who are, strangely, only two games out of fifth place despite their vacation from success last week when they lost five of their last six engagements, return to the diamond today for, naturally, better or worse.

And the chances are that it will be for the better inasmuch as the opposition will be Connie Mack's Athletics, who have struck rock-bottom in the American League after a sensational early season spurt. A double-header is scheduled this afternoon.

It is no compliment to the Nats that they are only two games behind the fifth-place Cleveland Indians. The Indians simply have been losing ball games at a faster rate than the Nats. During the past two weeks it has been the old story of the Cleveland team on the road. Cleveland's failures on the road are historic and history has simply been repeating itself of late.

Manager Bucky Harris has Monte Weaver, with three days' rest, ready to shoot at the Athletics in one of the games of the twin bill today. In deference to Ed Linke's last performance against the Athletics, when he incurred an undeserved defeat in the ninth inning, the fat right-hander probably will get the other pitching assignment.

One of Connie Mack's starting pitchers is expected to be little Edgar Smith, the blond lefthander, who has two victories over the Nats to his credit this season. George Caster, another who has beaten the Nats twice, may pitch in the second games.

The Nats and the Athletics have broken even in eight games this year and played to one tie, but of late the battling has been in favor of the Nats. The Athletics won three of their games from Washington in the first week of the season, when they were red hot and the sensation of the league.

Washington fans will see for the first time in a Philadelphia uniform Outfielder Jess Hill, who has planted himself solidly in the Athletics' line-up since being released on waivers by the Nats a month ago. Hill's hitting has been one of the few bright spots on Connie Mack's Club. He occupies the important fifth place in the batting order.

District Boy Trails From Start of Bout

Italian Exhibits Speed; Torrance Technical K. O. Victim.

Phil Furr, Washington's wandering welterweight champion, came home from Hollywood last night and was given a big hand on his first appearance here in several months, said hand belonging to Vittorio Venturi, who won a clean cut, unanimous decision in a bristling ten-round bout.

A audience of aproximately 2,500 fans, who contributed more than 3,000 to the till, were on hand to welcome Phillip, but Venturi beat 'em to the punch. He beat Furr to it, too, and therein hangs a story.

On The Post's score sheet, Furr won only three rounds, the second, fourth and ninth, and two of these on fouls. He spent most of the other seven searching vainly for Vittorio, who seemed to pop out from under the carpet, beat Phil around the ears for a couple of minutes, and disappear again. He actually was harder to hit than a nickel slot machine jackpot.

They started slowly, Venturi rolling through his set-up exercises to get acclimated, Furr trailing him with right-hand cocked, but nothinng to aim it at. But Furr realized he was in for a stormy evening when the Venturi tagged him on the button with his fine old eyetalian hand in the second, and from then on it was livelier than a couple of cooties at play.

Flicking his left in hiccough style and following with a steaming overhand right, Venturi began to amass his winning points in the third round. He won it by a close margin, but was still convincing to remove any doubt as to the inevitable outcome.

Furr Is Belted.

As the fight wore on Venturi continued to belt Furr almost at will with less returns than the Republicans received in the last election. He rocked the champeen with two hard rights to the head in the sixth, and had his head bobbing up and down like a cork with uppercuts in close to the body in the seventh.

The seventh, paradoxically, was Furr's best round. He stung Venturi with a whistling right to the mouth and whacked him in the body with a terrific right. But Venturi dodged back into his shell and even a bloodhound couldn't have found an opening in his defense.

Murray Kanner, occupying his customary role of spoiler, marred the evening from Jack Torrance's viewpoint when he laid the retired Olympic shot-putter on the canvas at the end of the fifth round to win by a technical knockout. Torrance was down for eight before being slapped down a second time.

Torrance's shot-put method of punching proved ineffective against the game and canny Kanner, who carried the fight to his larger opponent and found in him an easy target. Torrance, a good-natured giant, didn't seem to like the game any too well.

Dean Takes Dunbar.

Irish Johnny Dean pulled a wild left hook out of the grandstand and slapped it up against Al Dunbar's head to repeat his technical knockout victory of last week. It took an extra round this time, however, Dunbar lasting until well into the second, after helping himself to a sizeable lead in the first.

Baby Manuel returned to the front after a nine-month lay-off, and fortunately opened a four-stitch cut over Ray Borree's right eye to win on a technical kayo in five rounds. Borree was a country mile out in front at the time of the accident, hitting Manuel with everything allowed under the rules.

Battling Zuzu, a local Negro middleweight, punched out a four-round decision over Prince Albert, of Miami, in the curtain-raiser. Zuzu put the Prince on the carpet with an overhand right to the face just as the final bell clanged.

U. S. Boxing Team Arrives at Dallas

Dallas, Aug. 9 (AP).—The crack United States team in the Pan-American Exposition's boxing games will arrive tomorrow to train for bouts with their South American opponents, starting Thursday night.

Gymnasium experts have installed the perfectly condition squad from South America as a strong favorite. Daily workouts and growing familiarity with a broiling Texas sun have rounded out the form of the visitors.

Five of the eight national A. A. U. champions will be in the group of Americans arriving tomorrow—Ted Cerwin, middleweight; William Speary, flyweight; James J. Robinson, heavyweight; Edward Walling, featherweight, and Joseph Kelly, lightweight.

G. W. Eleven Starts Drill September 6

To Return to Camp Letts for Training Sixth Straight Year.

George Washington University's football squad will train at Camp Letts, Md., for the sixth time this fall, Graduate Manager Max Farrington announced yesterday. The Colonial squad will open operations at the Rhodes River base on Labor Day, September 6, and remain there for weeks.

There will be 20 letter winners in the squad of 45, the best balanced group from the standpoint of experience G. W. has had in several years. The veterans missing will be Capt. Frank Kavalier, Herb Reeves, George Jenkins, Dale Prather and Ray Hanken. Another letter winner, Armando Salturelli, who alternated at tackle and center, will not chance recurrence of a leg injury he suffered last season. He has decided to give up football.

While replacing their regulars will be the biggest task confronting the coaches, they will have a week longer than usual to prepare the squad for its first game. The opener is with Wake Forest on October 1. G. W. generally starts its season the fourth week in September.

Another source of encouragement was the spring training sessions, declared by the coaches to be the most beneficial G. W. has held in several years.

Jim Pixlee, athletic director and head coach, will wind up preparations for the football season when he returns from Los Angeles August 22. Pixlee again will be assisted by Bill Reinhart, backfield coach, and Barton (Botchey) Koch, line coach. Tim Moynihan, recently added to the staff, is expected to aid in tutoring both the varsity and freshman lines.

Prices for all seven of G. W.'s home games will be the same. In the past, these have varied according to the opposition. Prices this fall will be: Unreserved general admission tickets, $1.10; grandstand and lower boxes, $1.65, and upper boxes, $2.20.

Owner of Europe's Trotting Ace Here

Maiani conferred for several hours with E. J. Baker, of St. Charles, Ill., and Sep Palin, owner and trainer, respectively, of Greyhound. The conference then was adjourned to Goshen, N. Y., where Maiani will witness the running of the classic Hambletonian on Wednesday and will see Greyhound in action for the first time tomorrow when he seeks to better the world record of 1:56¼ for the mile set by Peter Manning in 1922.

JAMES RIVER obtained clear sailing on the inside in the run through the backstretch, went to the front with a rush after rounding the far turn, drawing out as if exhilarating his company. SOLITARY, well placed, was eased back midway of the turn; moved up willingly when called upon and finished willingly, although never in a position to endanger the winner. ERNIE MANZER closed a good gap after trailing his field into the backstretch. AURA was unable to close any ground when placed under punishment.

SECOND RACE—One Mile. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 2:51. Off at 2:51. Winner, Mrs. C. W. Pheland's ch. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SIS ROYAL, $22.20, $8.40, $6.00; ORILEY, $4.80, $3.80; SIGHTING BAR, $5.00.

SIS ROYAL went to the front when straightening out on the backstretch, drew clear before reaching the half mile ground, increased her lead steadily but weakened in the stretch and had to be hard ridden to hold safe the big of ORILEY. The latter was raced on until nearing the far turn; moved up gamely when called upon and was catching the winner at every stride at the end. SIGHTING BAR, in closest chase of the early pace, was much used in an effort to reach the leader and weakened in the last quarter-mile, although never threatened for third.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; allowances. The Dedham Purse. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:21. Off 3:26 3-5. Winner, Mrs. H. S. Two-dollar mutuels paid—AUTUMN QUEST, $4.60, $3.40, $2.80; ROYAL RHAPSODY (entry), $3.80, $2.80; WARLAINE, $3.40.

AUTUMN QUEST, away well, moved up fast in the opening quarter-mile to gain a slight lead, met determined opposition from ROYAL RHAPSODY, shaking the latter off during the closing furlongs. ROYAL RHAPSODY, unruly at the post, had speed from the start, made a determined attempt to go along with the winner and only gave way in the last furlong. WARLAINE, unable to keep pace early, came with good speed in the stretch run and was up in the last strides to wear down TO THE RESCUE.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from Bahr gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 3:57. Off at 4:00½. Winner, A. J. Hallwell's ch. m. Two-dollar mutuels paid—NARISE, $8.80, $4.20, $3.00; STEEL WORKER, $5.20, $4.00; BURYALUS, $4.40.

NARISE moved up fast in the opening quarter mile, drew away into a good lead after rounding the far turn, came out into the middle of the track when reaching the stretch and drew out through the last furlong. STEEL WORKER was prominent throughout and held on willingly to the place. BURYALUS was forwardly placed all the way, although never in a position to endanger the first two.

FIFTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $1,000; allowances. The Brooklyn Purse. For 3-year-olds. Start good from Bahr gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 4:23. Off at 4:29. Winner, R. R. Two-dollar mutuels paid—TINDERBOX, $6.80, $3.60, $2.60; TEDDY PATIC, $3.60, $3.00; I'M SO DRY, $3.20.

TINDERBOX, under steadying restraint while disputing the early command with TEDDY PATIC, shook off the latter when straightening out in the stretch, drawing out to win with speed to spare. TEDDY PATIC had speed from the start, made a game effort to go along but was no match. I'M SO DRY, unable to keep pace early, came with good speed in the stretch run and was up in the last strides to wear down COMBATANT in the last furlong.

DIX HARD, ridden hard in an effort to improve his position, came with good energy on the outside through the stretch, but was never able to reach the winner. CATCHALL, unable to keep up early, was forced to take back when improving his position, recovered gamely and finished with good effort.

HEEDING ALONG, well placed on the inside through the stretch turn, BUSTER BOY took command at once, drew clear when reaching the backstretch, was steadied along in front, was hard ridden in an effort to keep pace, but was not good enough and weakened slightly in the last furlong.

Lancaster Printer's 77 Leads Field

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Aug. 9.—John Klein, 22-year-old shotmaker from Lancaster, Pa., turned in a 77 today to set the pace in the first 18-hole round of the Union Printers International Golf Association's fourteenth annual 72-hole championship here.

Klein, playing in his first association tournament, led 100 other type-linkmen from as far West as California and from Boston to Miami, Fla., on the Eastern Seaboard. Additional 18-hole rounds are carded tomorrow, Wednesday and Thursday.

Joe Balestri, of Washington, also competing in his first title tourney, and J. L. Matthews, a portsider from Miami, scored 78's to threaten Klein's advantage.

The defending champion, Ed Merkle, of Washington, was only three over par going to the fourteenth tee, but ran into trouble on the hole and wound up with an 80. He took an eight on the fourteenth after putting his second shot into one of the ditches bisecting the fairway.

Fred Streinger, of Washington, and Ed Gableman, of Cincinnati, former association title holders, couldn't solve puzzles on the Rodgers Forge course and neither was able to break 80. Streinger turned in an 84 while Gableman, only two-time winner of the title, carded an 81.

Bobby Peters, 20-year-old Grand Rapids player and winner of the Michigan typo championship this year, was up among the leaders in today's play, finishing with a 79.

Tinder Box's Drive Scores In Mile Race

Suffolk Feature Is Run in Mud; Teddy Patic Second in Test.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Aug. 9.—E. B. McGhee's Tinder Box today won the Brookline Purse, 1-mile feature of the Suffolk Downs program, over a track muddy by torrential rains, to pay $6.80.

The Bright Knight gelding had two and a half lengths on Willis Sharpe Kilmer's Teddy Patic at the end while turning the distance in 1:40 3-5 over the off track.

Two lengths away was Mrs. L. Holcomb's I'm So Dry with a two and a half lengths advantage on Mrs. H. S. Horkheimer's Competent. Teddy Patic paid $3.80 to place and I'm So Dry brought $3.20 for show.

Teddy Patic showed the way out of the gate, but going around the clubhouse turn Tinder Box moved to him, caught him in the back stretch and the two fought it out, head and head, until they turned for home. The Bright Knight gelding stepped away to a length advantage once Red Howell let him have his head, and he drew away in the drive down the stretch to win handily. The others were no factors in the race at any time.

It was the winner's first victory in 16 starts since he started racing. He was a 2-to-1 choice in the wagering.

Post Notes on FISHING

By Bill Ackerman.

ACKERMAN

No fuss or feathers about the fishing contest that gets under way next Sunday morning, but just a good opportunity to get yourself a lot of new fishing tackle. Arranged by The Post, aided and abetted by your local sports stores, to prove that the stories you hear about large fish, caught in the bay country, are not merely figments of the imagination.

That is all there is to it—the largest fish you can catch just so long as it is on some kind of a hook and line. Weekly prizes, grand prizes—but read in this column on Friday the few easy rules, and get the entry blank, that must accompany your entry when you weigh it in at your own tackle store.

Calls for information and names of captains at Ocean City, Md., are indicative of the great interests the exceptional white marlin fishing is arousing in anglers, that heretofore, have been content to pull in hardheads in bay waters.

The smallest Jacks Pot marlin compare favorably in weight with the average Florida sailfish, and nine times out of ten, they will out-run, out-jump and out-walk their Southern cousins. In addition, there is always the chance of getting on a really big fish—because blue marlin occasionally run with the white.

Experienced Bimini and gulf-stream skippers are coming North this year to get in on it, greatly augmenting the already fine fleet of local boats, and anglers from New York to North Carolina are sailing with them.

For your notebook: The rates on the off-shore boats are $25 for blue-fishing and $30 for marlin fishing. Considering the investment and the equipment necessary, this is reasonable. Your party should have in it four persons, fewer if you would prefer it, but no more. The cost, so divided, is very little. When not noted, the following captains can be reached through James Jarmen at Ocean City 75. Better still, make a reservation locally through Milton Gordon at the Atlas Sport Store.

Capt. James (Red) Hall, Ocean City 100, Cruiser Cutty Sark. Complete equipment for any kind of fishing, because he followed the big ones in the Bahamas, during the winter, as does Capt. Bob Little, on his Gwen Nadine. Berths at Tal Buntings dock. Another Miamian, Capt. Harry Gilbert, with his 32-foot cruiser Pal, charges $35 per day because he supplies adequate tackle. Does not blue or stillfish. Capt. Crawford Savage, with his 40-foot Hilda with twin screw, Capt. Fred Savage in the 45-foot Ace Hi, Capt. Lee Savage and his 38-foot triple screw Sea Gull. Capt. Marvin Williams and the 37-foot Bessie B., Capt. James B. Whaley in his 33-foot twin screw Em Pries II, powered with a pair of 285 Kermaths, Capt. Clarence Carpenter, Capt. H. C. Mattison in 32-foot Mousie II, does not still fish and charges $35 for marlin fishing. Capt. Josh Bunting in the 36-foot Evelyn, Capt. Talbot Bunting charges $35 to marlin fish on his 41-foot twin screw Cecil B. There are many more, should these not be able to keep you going, but keep in mind that reservations for week-ends should be made many days in advance.

Bluefishing has not been quite up to par, although there are a few being caught every day around the Middles and in the Potomac from Smiths Creek to Smith Point. The catches continue slow down the Virginia shore. Capt. R. B. Moore, at Reedville, says his daily catch averages from 5 to 12, but they are large fish.

Norman Edwards—Attention! Post Notes is in receipt of a prize awarded you by the Chesapeake Bay Fishing Fair Association for catching that 5 pound 8 ounce hardhead last month. Being short on the address that should go with it, it will be necessary for you to call National 4200, so that it may be mailed to you.

Bucknell Trainer Dies.

Lewisburg, Pa., Aug. 9 (AP).—George "Peachy" Kline, 59, who trained Bucknell University athletes for 31 years, died today. He was seriously ill during the 1929 and 1930 football campaigns and missed his first Bucknell football game in 29 years.

Bob Barnett, Mel Shorey Win 2 Prizes

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

A subpar 69 by George Diffenbaugh and an amateur course mark on the part of Volney Burnett, a 68, combined to win the pro-amateur at Beaver Dam yesterday, the Indian Spring duo recording a best ball of 64 strokes, while Diffenbaugh's 3 under perfect figures score was tops in the pro sweepstakes.

Maury Fitzgerald, the stocky sports writer, representing the Kenwood club, picked two good partners in Mel Shorey and Diffenbaugh, helping them on several holes to share the runner-up prize in the pro-am with Eddie Johnson, Baltimore, and Johnny Bass, the Clifton Park professional, all with 65.

Diffenbaugh "Hot."

Diffenbaugh accounted for four birdies, with putts from 5 to 10 feet, missing par on the seventh hole, where he pushed his iron shot. The winning combination was out in 33, 3 under par, but they played the last five holes of the back nine in even 3's, including an eagle and two birdies by Burnett, who fashioned a 32 individually.

Bass and his 15-year-old partner from the Baltimore public links looked like sure winners at the nine-hole mark as they turned in a best-ball of 30. Johnson scored birdies on two of his stroke holes, netting eagles, and Bass was good for sub-par holes on three and nine. They were unable to do better than 35 on the second trip, a 6 on the tenth hole hurting their chances.

Shorey, playing the second nine first, was out in 34, 2 under par, and combined with Fitzgerald for a best-ball score of 31, but Mel hit four bad holes on the next nine to go 2 over par and finish with 72.

Cox rained a majority of his approach shots within the 8-foot circle of the cup, was baffled by the Landover Club's putting surfaces and was only one under par at the finish. Barnett tied him by rallying with a 34 after an outgoing 37.

Burnett Has Eagle.

Burnett, the State amateur champion, who compiled the sensational streak of medal rounds early in the season, was out in an inauspicious 36, even par and parred the next four holes before he hit his spectacular sub-par streak, 2-3-3-3-4, on holes answering to par of 3-4-5-3-4.

He holed a 40-footer on the short fourteenth, a 12-inch putt on the next, both for birdies, smacked a 1-iron shot 10 feet from the pin on the par 5 sixteenth and made the putt for an eagle. He finished par on the last two holes for the 32 and 68.

A summation of the day's play found Diffenbaugh with three prizes, Shorey, Fitzgerald and Barnett with two each, and Burnett, Reeside, Bass and Johnson with one.

Most Choices Win Matches In East Tennis

By the Associated Press.

Rye, N. Y., Aug. 9.—One upset marked the third day of the Eastern grass courts tennis championships at the Westchester Country Club today as most of the third-round brackets in men's and women's singles were filled and a start was made on the doubles.

Helen Pedersen, of Stamford, Conn., third-seeded woman player, fell before Barbara Winslow, of Hollywood, Calif., 6—3, 6—8, 6—4. Miss Pedersen was weak as a result of ptomaine poisoning.

A couple of other oddities marked the day's play that saw all the seeded Americans in the men's division except Art Hendrix, of Lakeland, Fla., reach the third round safely. Bryan (Bitsy) Grant, the little Davis Cup star from Atlanta, who is second on the select list, had to go back and play his first-round match after topping William J. Clothier, of Philadelphia, in a provisional second-round match yesterday. Clothier had to return home, so Grant disposed of him first, then today whipped Charles Carr, of Los Angeles, 6—2, 6—2.

Gene Mako, another Davis Cupper, who had won his first-round singles match yesterday, defaulted to Peter Lauck, of Wynnewood, Pa., in the second. He explained he wanted to rest before playing in the doubles with Don Budge.

Frank Shields, the movie actor who is making a tennis comeback, was one of the few players to try two matches. He took a pair of love sets from George Ball, of El Paso, Tex., but was only two points from defeat at one time in his second-round match with William V. Winslow, of South Orange, N. J., before he won 6—4, 3—6 8—6.

Illinois Pros Campaign to Oust Jacobus

By William Weeks.

Associated Press Sports Writer.

Chicago, Aug. 9.—The Illinois section of the Professional Golfers' Association of America, at odds with the national organization's policies for a year or more, opened a campaign today to oust President George R. Jacobus, of Ridgewood, N. J.

The campaign to replace Jacobus, which has been brewing in the Chicago neighborhood since last year's annual convention here, was moved out into the open with the announcement that Alex Cunningham, president of the Illinois section, would head an opposition ticket next November.

Cunningham, a large Scot from golf's classic St. Andrews district, said he had agreed to run at the request of his section and many other professionals "who desire a change in the national P. G. A. administration."

Cunningham's announcement hinted broadly that the P. G. A. was dominated by a minority group political machine, and said his candidacy would be made on a platform calling for elimination of the alleged conditions of affairs.

Jacobus lost favor with the Illinois pros last spring when he announced that a trophy, given by Harry E. Radix, of Chicago, for presentation to the player turning in the lowest scoring record per round in official competition annually, would be discontinued. The trophy, said to have been solicited and accepted as a permanent award, became an orphan this season after two years as an official honor, without explanation enough to satisfy Illinois section pros.

There also was considerable muttering against Jacobus last fall following the dismissal of Robert E. Harlow as manager of the association's tournament bureau. A petition asking reconsideration of Harlow's removal was circulated and requests from officers of several sections for a special hearing were filed. The latter move was dropped, however, because of the expense involved in calling a special meeting.

Without mentioning Jacobus' name in his announcement, Cunningham said:

"The objective of my brother professionals will be to set up a national administration which will hold to an impartial, strict and complete observance of the association group to control the P. G. A., by a code, and resist efforts of a minority self-perpetuating political machine. I favor an administration in which the entire membership shall be advised at all times concerning the business of the association, and be permitted to function freely and in the open."

Girls to Clash Today; Junior Title at Stake

The uphill struggle that has carried blonde Betty Jacob, of Montrose and Molly Thompson, of Chevy Chase, into the final round of the girls' junior tennis tournament conducted by the Department of Playgrounds will be climaxed today when these girls meet for the championship. The title match will be staged on the Chevy Chase Playground Center court at 10 a. m.

In her early round matches Miss Thompson was not pressed as severely to win as was Miss Jacob, but the latter drew more experienced players in her half of the draw. However, Miss Thompson is a slight favorite with those who have followed play in the tourney, limited to girls 16 years and under.

Both Miss Jacob and Miss Thompson paced their respective doubles teams to semifinal-round victories yesterday, assuring their meeting in this tournament also. Miss Jacob and Harriet Gordon defeated Erma Dean and Louise Barnes, of Garfield, 12—10, 8—6.

Miss Thompson and Margo Mink had less difficulty in eliminating Constance and Dorothy McCulley, of Burroughs, 6—4, 6—2.

MacFadden to Sponsor Women's $2,000 Swim

New York, Aug. 9 (U.P.).—Berriarr MacFadden, publisher, will celebrate his sixty-ninth birthday next Monday by staging a women's half-mile open swim in Lake Erie, off Cleveland, with $2,000 in prizes for the mermaids.

On the basis of past performances, Mrs. Lenore Kight Wingard, of Homestead, Pa., holder of seven world and 22 national free-style records in addition to the Olympic 400-meter title, rates as favorite for the first prize of $1,000. Second money is $500 with other prizes running from $200 to $50 for the first eight to finish.

Ben Cantwell Sold To Brooklyn Club

New York, Aug. 9 (AP).—Ben Cantwell, veteran right-hander recently drafted from their Jersey City "farm" of the International League, today was sold outright by the New York Giants to the Brooklyn Dodgers for an unannounced sum.

Since joining the Giants in St. Louis on their last road trip, Cantwell has pitched in only one game, being knocked out of the box by the Cardinals and charged with a defeat. He came to Jersey City from the Boston Bees, with whom he won nine and lost nine last year. Cantwell is 35 years old.

Henry Armstrong To Battle Cabello

Negotiations which began when Armstrong visited Washington to witness the Freddie Steele-Charlie Williams bout on the Variety Club —Washington Post card of July 21 were terminated yesterday afternoon when Eddie Meade appeared at Joe Turner's office to complete arrangements.

At the present time, Armstrong is preparing for his fight with Eddie Brink, New York featherweight, tomorrow night and will come directly here Thursday by airplane, his only mode of travel, to begin training for his bout with Cabello.

Although Petey Sarron, Birmingham, Ala., buzzsaw, is still regarded in official circles as the king of the 126-pounders, he is done, so ringwise observers say, only because he has not met Armstrong. Sarron is presently returning to the United States to defend his title after a successful string of fights and exhibitions in South Africa.

Armstrong holds victories over such well-known battlers as Al Blotch, Australian boxer; Lou Massey, Pete DeGrasse, Jesse Carter, Benny Bass, all of whom he defeated via the knockout route.

His most recent victory was a sensational knockout of Mike Belloise, last year's No. 1 featherweight, in five rounds. He had previously defeated Belloise, who under the present ratings, is No. 3, by a decision.

Cabello, winner of 13 fights in 17 tries, has long been regarded as a top-rate performer and is noted as one of the busiest battlers in his class. He holds victories over Johnny Moore, Willie Britt, Ben Johnson, by knockouts, and has decisioned, among others, Al Lopiano, Alex Gaines, whom he defeated in Venezuela, last year.

The supporting card, which is as yet incomplete, will be composed of white fighters, Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn, announced last night.

Cotton Breaks With Forecast Of Heavy Crop

By the Associated Press

The accuracy of the estimate issued by the Federal Crop Reporting Board was questioned by Chairman Smith (Democrat), South Carolina, of the Senate Agriculture Committee. He expressed belief the board might be as much as a million bales off.

The 1937 yield predicted by the Federal board would be 3,194,118 bales larger than last year. The board said the crop is expected to yield 223.3 pounds per acre. Such a yield would be the highest per acre ever recorded, the board declared.

It was estimated unofficially that a crop of the size the board forecast would be worth $812,000,000 on the basis of the closing October futures prices at New York today—10.42 cents a pound. The board predicted 33,429,000 acres would be harvested, an increase of 11 per cent over last year, but 18 per cent less than the average during the five-year period from 1928 to 1932. The 1937 crop is expected officially to be 25.8 per cent larger than the 1936 crop of 12,399,000 bales and 6.3 per cent above the 1928 to 1932 average of 14,667,000 bales.

December at 10.37.

New York, Aug. 9 (AP).—An early cotton advance of 6 to 10 points today based on higher Liverpool cables and trade buying and covering for over the bureau report was followed by a break of 46 to 58 points under heavy general selling following publication of Government crop estimate. December sold 10.83 early and declined to 10.30 and closed at 10.37, with entire list showing final losses of 28 to 42 points.

U. S. to Investigate Cord Stock Deals

Chicago, Aug. 9 (AP).—United States District Attorney Michael L. Igoe instructed his first assistant, Warren Canaday, today to investigate charges of stock manipulation brought against Errett L. Cord and Morris Markin Saturday by the Securities and Exchange Commission. Igoe said he ordered the investigation to determine whether an inquiry by postoffice inspectors regarding any misuse of the mails was warranted.

In the bill of complaint, the SEC contended that Cord, who quit Saturday as head of Cord Corporation, and Markin, president of Checker Cab Manufacturing Co., had manipulateed stocks in Checker Cab, Parmelee Transportation and Chicago Yellow Cab companies. Cord and Markin consented to issuance by Federal Judge Charles E. Woodward of a permanent injunction but denied they had manipulated the market.

New York, Aug. 9 (AP).—It was reported here today that the new interests in control of the Cord Corporation are contemplating abandoning the automobile manufacturing and ship-building field and concentrating on aviation and automotive parts.

Wheat Tumbles As Big Supply Floods Market

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Aug. 9.—Enormous increase of the United States wheat visible supply total did much to plunge Chicago wheat prices down nearly 3 cents a bushel late today. Adding impetus to a selling wave that accompanied the fall of values were assertions that the United States' big stock of wheat, now aggregating 101,984,000 bushels against 72,913,000 a year ago, tends to fortify European buyers in an indifferent attitude. Today's increase of this country's wheat visible supply total was 13,897,000 bushels.

All Chicago wheat futures closed at the day's lowest level, 2¼@2¾ cents under Saturday's finish; September 1.10⅝@1.10½, December 1.11⅛@1.11⅜, May 1.12⅞@1.13; corn 1¼ lower to 1⅜ higher, September 1.03⅜@1.03¼, December 67¾@67⅞, May 69¼; oats ⅜@1½ off, December 30¼@30⅜, and rye showing 1⅜@2¼ drop. The outcome in provisions was unchanged to a setback of 22 cents.

The Market

A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Move Slowly Upward in Moderate Trading; Cotton and Wheat Decline Sharply.

New York, Aug. 9.—Government bonds looked steady after early hesitation. Sterling dropped a little and the French franc was held rigid. Stocks opened a little higher, moved up rapidly, settled back and closed with a firm tone around the best prices paid on the recovery movement. Stock sales were around three-quarters of a million shares. Cotton and grains dropped. September wheat sold ex rust damage reports at $1.10⅛ a bushel, down 2½ cents.

Bulls found the grass green in several spots when they returned to forage in the markets this morning. To begin with, the quick disposal of the court measure in the Senate seemed to mean an early adjournment of Congress and no Congress always is better than the best one that ever could convene. To carry on after that the early week steel trade reviews gave an encouraging forecast of large buying orders soon to come, although this afternoon the American Iron & Steel Institute estimated this week's operating rate for the industry at 84.6 per cent of capacity, a drop of 1 per cent from the previous week.

New Labor Deal.

This week also saw the renewal of negotiations between General Motors Corporation and the C. I. O. unions on wages and hours. The market was constrained to believe that the experience of the corporation with strikes after its last agreement and the turn of the tide against the Lewis following in many places would lead to a more favorable outcome than that involved in the virtual surrender of General Motors last spring. Moreover, so far as General Motors stock itself was concerned, the higher prices for cars just announced promise to increase the profit margin.

Another factor with bullish implications for the long view was the Government's estimate of the cotton crop. In placing the picking this year at 15,593,000 bales, the largest crop in six years, the Government guessed higher than most private estimates. The consequence was that the cotton market responded with an abrupt drop of 23 to 37 points, or from more than $1 to nearly $2 a bale. No Government predictions were made on price, which has gone down about $9 a bale from the time of the official report on acreage early last month. On that occasion President Roosevelt predicted 8 cents a pound for cotton (provided, of course, full authority to regulate, dole, govern and interfere were not given to him); his previous guess was 5-cent cotton, made when the AAA was overturned.

Cotton Promises Profits.

Actually a bumper cotton crop is a blessing. The mere size of the crop will do much to lift employment all over the South directly and in many parts of the North indirectly. A large crop at a low price is preferable from every standpoint to a small harvest at a high price. With larger output and a lower price this country stands to regain part of its exporting power already lost or in danger of being lost to production of cotton in other parts of the world.

One drawback only suggests itself, namely, planters long fattening on high-priced cotton may demand a larger dole and the Government possibly will give it to them, at taxpayers' expense. Even that is better than to combine a dole with forced reduction of the crop.

Demand for Dole.

Wheat and other grain prices also were depressed by the discovery of a larger harvest than had been anticipated in some speculative quarters. In grains also the decline in prices—which still are much higher than consumers care to see them and than production costs warrant—doubtless will increase pressure on Congress to pass the Wallace ever-something granary bill, designed to give control of crops to the Department of Agriculture and to make taxpayers make good any drop in farm income.

For all the alarms of one kind and another coming from Washington, the securities markets were guided principally by a fair chance of better business this autumn. Steel set a good pace for the market, and although profit taking served to hold down the rise, the majority of stocks moved up fractions to a point. Railroad shares also grew firmer and the metal held speculative attention. For a while rather heavy trading took place in low-priced issues, notably Radio and Park-Utah.

Steel sold above 120 and Bethlehem topped 100. National Steel reached a new top. Chrysler recovered the greater part of its dividend. Farm implement and mail orders went ahead in spite of the lower cotton and grain prices, influenced principally by the high yields in prospect for the farm acreage. Favorites of the day were Loews, Rubber, Locomotive, Interlake Iron, McKeesport, Mohawk, Superheater, Vanadium and Wayne Pump.

By Thomas M. Cahill.

Robert E. Buckley, president of National Permanent Building Association and chief executive of the District of Columbia Building and Loan League, will head the latter group's delegation to the convention of the United States Building and Loan League in Los Angeles October 6-8.

Other delegates named include Edward C. Baltz, secretary, Perpetual Building Association and first vice president of the national league; Carl J. Clinton James, attorney, Columbia Permanent Building Association and chairman of the national league's legislative commitee.

Alternates selected are John N. Clipper, Washington Permanent Building Association, and E. L. McAleer, secretary, Equitable Building Association. Arthur G. Bishop will represent the Perpetual Building Association at the California meeting which will witness the election of Edward C. Baltz to the presidency of the United States league.

The local delegation will join other delegates on a special train at Chicago and arrive at Los Angeles October 3 for a meeting of the executive committee prior to the general sessions. Election of Mr. Baltz as chief executive of the national organization, will mean, in all probability, selection of Washington, his home city, as the place for the convention of 1938.

Father Finds Cigarette Girl With Va. Circus

'Better Than the River,' He Says, Hotel Patrons Aid in Identification.

The captain of the excursion steamer, who lived at the hotel last winter and was equally certain of her identity, questioned her. She denied she ever had worked in Washington, saying she was from New York. Her confused manner convinced the captain he was right and resulted in his telephoning the Shoreham, employes of which notified police.

Tells Circus Ambitions

In the circus dressing room last night Miss Major, mounted on a big chestnut horse and ready for her next act, told how she happened to hit the sawdust trail.

"I've always wanted to do it," she drawled. "Then a couple of weeks ago I saw a want ad for riders in a theatrical magazine. I came here, telling them I as Billy Sergeant."

"Yes," she added, "and my father's going to let me stay."

Asked whether she had had to work hard at her cigarette-girl job, Miss Major laconically explained, "I worked from 12 o'clock until 12 o'clock."

She grew enthusiastic when the subject of her new work was brought up.

Plans "Fancy Riding."

"I'll do fancy riding," she said, her gray eyes lighting. "I've been riding ever since I was knee-high."

A whistle shrilled somewhere and the big chestnut, heeding the cue, moved off slowly with the rest of the troupe. Miss Major leaned over:

"When I tell my grandchildren about my experience with a circus, I'll send you a telegram and you can come and listen to them," she said. Then she rode through the performers' entrance toward the sawdust ring.

Previous to her encounter with her father yesterday, she was questioned by circus officials and reporters. Her replies were varied. Once she would insist she had hitch hiked from New York to Covington, Ky., where she joined the circus. Again she would say her memory had failed and she did not know where she had come from. She called herself Mary or Billie Sergeant.

The circus management did not care who she was. "She's a swell rider—one of the best we've got," said Manager Mel Smith "She's over 21 and knows her own business. If she says she's 'Billy Sergeant,' then Billy Sergeant,' she is as far as this outfit is concerned."

Major first identified his daughter from the sidelines at the circus. When he went to the dressing room to see her, Doris fell sobbing into his arms.

"I just had to do it," she exclaimed. "I was so tired."

"She's happy with the circus and making good and I'll let her stay on," he said. "She just wanted to get away from everything. She's ridden since she was 8 years old and the circus life should be good for her, after seven years of indoor life."

Fond of Animals.

Always fond of animals, she is reported to have told friends she would like to join a circus or become an animal trainer. During her spare hours she used to visit the Zoo here. Her friends claim she made friends with the wolves and other wild beasts and petted them when the guards were not looking.

The divorced mother of two children, she attributed her escapade to a desire to "get away from it all." Her friends reported that before she vanished she complained she was "in a rut and had to do something sensational." The white automobile in which she used to drive around Washington and the Great Dane which frequently accompanied her indicate her fondness for the unusual.

The drowning theory already had been discarded by police who said the body would have come to the surface by now. It had been strengthened by a cab driver's story of taking a girl answering Miss Major's description to Key Bridge, where she said she was meeting friends and going for a swim.

Supporters of the foul play theory pointed to the report the girl was writing a book describing the behavior of the Nation's celebrities who stopped at the Shoreham. They believed she might have met violence at the hands of some one mentioned in the book.

Wife, 65, of Man, 30, Claims Nonsupport

Gloucester, Mass., Aug. 9 (AP).—Another chapter of the stormy married life of Burton S. Tucker, 30, and his 65-year-old wife, unfolded today as Mrs. Tucker charged her husband with failing to support their three children.

Chief of Police Louis J. Boutchie said Mrs. Tucker, with whom Tucker eloped when he was 16, told him she didn't care about herself, but that their three children, Vivian, 13; Violet, 12, and Burton, jr., 10, were destitute.

Last May Tucker was acquitted in New York of a charge brought by his wife that he had abandoned her and their children. At that time he testified his wife had supported him until their parting last July. Mrs. Tucker testified her husband abandoned her after her $800,000 fortune had been dissipated.

U. S. Rejects Plan For Potomac Work

Baltimore, Aug. 9 (AP).—Arthur E. Hungerford, State director of the National Emergency Council, said today he was advised by War Department engineers that "flood damages are not of sufficient magnitude nor widely enough distributed" in the Potomac River Basin to "justify any larger comprehensive reservoir control system."

Hungerford said Col. Earl I. Brown, engineer of the War Department's South Atlantic division, with headquarters in Richmond, Va., informed him "needed protection (in the Potomac River flood area) can be obtained more economically by local works."

The engineer's report pointed out interested persons in the area may appeal the decision to the board of engineers for rivers and harbors, in Washington.

women, will be chosen for the first treatments, according to Dr. Roscoe W. Hall, acting superintendent. This fact does not mean that the venture is experimental in nature, however. "The treatment is past the experimental stage," he told The Post. "It is now recognized everywhere as an effective remedy."

Only a limited number can be treated at once because of the constant attention which doctors and nurses must give the patients. They will be segregated in one ward, divided into men's and women's quarters.

In time, the staff may be able to care for 20 "shock" patients at once. As some victims are cured and released, vacancies will occur in the ward. Ultimately Dr. Hall believes all the dementia praecox victims who are strong enough will undergo the treatment.

Ordinadily the treatment lasts about two months. Some patients are cured within a shorter period. Others fail to show the expected gradual improvement, react unfavorably or prove unable to stand the strain. In these cases the insulin injections are discontinued after a week or two.

The patient is "shocked," or injected with a large dose of insulin, each morning. Soon afterwards he lapses into a coma, during which he undergoes profound physical changes. After several hours he regains consciousness. Temporarily his personality is readjusted and his attitude toward himself and the outside world becomes more normal.

In this brief period his physician can discuss his problems with him and attempt to banish his delusions of persecution and other psychoses. According to Dr. Hall, the hardest type to cure is the "pathological day-dreamer," who finds his psychosis more comfortable than reality. In most cases, however, the patient becomes more normal day by day.

The method is seldom effective with persons who have been ill more than a year. Even in these cases, no ill effects follow the insulin injections. Fewer deaths have been caused by the treatment than by ordinary appendicitis operations, says Dr. Simon.

Fifty per cent of St. Elizabeths' 5,700 patients suffer from dementia praecox. This proportion is about the same in all institutions for mental cases.

If the insulin method were universally effective, one-fourth of the hospital beds in use in this country at present would no longer be needed, Dr. Hall says. Of the 800,000 beds used, 400,000 are occupied by mental patients, of whom 200,000 suffer from dementia praecox.

'Frisco Curb Trade Given Wider Range

The Securities and Exchange Commission approved the applications of the San Francisco Curb Exchange to trade in its unlisted department. Permission to trade in Studebaker Corporation common stock, $1 par; United Aircraft Corporation capital stock, $5 par, and Utah-Idaho Sugar Co. common stock, $5 par was granted.

The S. E. C. denied the applications of the exchange to trade unlisted Atlas Corporation 6 per cent preferred stock, $50 par and Berkley & Gay Furniture Co. stock purchase warrants.

The S. E. C. found in the case of Atlas preferred the exchange did not establish existence of "public distribution" or "public trading activity," sufficient to meet the law's requirements. The commission refused the Berkley & Gay Furniture Co. warrant trading because sufficient public distribution was not established.

400 Airplanes Test London's Sky Defenses

Greatest Maneuvers in City's History Continue Through Night.

By the Associated Press.

London, Aug. 9.—Britain tested London's vulnerability to attack from the skies tonight with the greatest air defense maneuvers in her history.

To the inexperienced eye, the mock warfare was just a realistic pageant, a play battle of flares, flashbulbs, cameras and fourth of July toys.

But to Londoners who experienced the harrowing night air raids of German Gothas and Zeppelins during the World War, the thunder of 400 warplanes dramatized the recent grim warning to Parliament that their city "is the choicest target in the world."

Although London—with its vast docks, oil depots, and the Enfield Munition Works—is the nerve center of England's defense, most of the targets tonight were in outlying districts.

All of southeast England—nearest to continental Europe—was the object of the attacking planes. The area included such vital coastal points as the mouth of the Thames River and the great port of Southampton.

The "invasion" was divided into two 15-hour attacks. The first began at 6 p. m. today and was to last until 9 a. m. tomorrow. The second will last through a similar night period starting at 6 p. m. tomorrow.

Bob Burns Says—

It takes a lot'ta confidence in one's self to get ahead in this world. I had one uncle who had a lot'ta confidence in himself. He started out as a water boy on a construction job, but he had such confidence and driving force that he soon worked his way up to foreman of the whole gang. They called him a slave driver and he made a lot'ta enemies among the men but he always got the building up, ahead of schedule.

One hot day he was bawling the workmen out for going so slow and one of the workmen spoke up and says, "Oh, what's your hurry? Remember, Rome wasn't built in a day!" And my uncle says, "Yes, I know, but I wasn't foreman on that job!"

Denying significance attached to the Flynn visit, Secretary McIntyre at Hyde Park said "unfortunately" several newspapers and one press association "carried a wholly misleading story" of the Bronx Democratic leader's visit to the President's home for Sunday luncheon.

"The President had made it definitely clear that a number of guests had been invited to a wholly social party," said McIntyre. "Mr. Flynn was among those guests. No political subjects were discussed and the stories printed this morning and today were therefore made out of whole cloth."

McIntyre said the President "repeated today for the thousandth time that he has not taken part, is not taking part and will not take part in any local primary election except in his home town or home county."

"It is, of course, necessary," McIntyre added, "that from time to time the President should see on Federal Government business wholly disassociated from local political events some individuals actively interested in primary or local elections.

"It is hoped that readers of newspapers will give little or no credence to stories which purport to print assumptions based on such visits. Unfortunately the overwhelming majority of such assumptions are not founded on fact."

Asks Third Terms Bar.

Shortly before word of the Hyde Park denial reached Washington, Copeland introduced in the Senate his proposed constitutional amendment to prohibit a President from serving a "third term."

It appeared aimed directly at Mr. Roosevelt, Gov. George Earle, of Pennsylvania, and three other Democratic Governors, have recently espoused his third term candidacy. The President has not commented directly on the third term boom, but has intimated in the past he has no such present ambition. The Constitution does not bar a President from serving more than eight years, but every President since Washington has declined to.

The Copeland amendment would limit eligibility for the Nation's highest office to "two terms of four years each." Even if a President succeeded to the office, and served out only a portion of one term, it would be counted as a full term.

One provision in particular would affect Mr. Roosevelt. If a President's first term was less than four years, because of the Twentieth or "Lame Duck" amendment, he would be eligible only for another four years. The President's first term was shortened more than a month by the Lame Duck amendment.

"The President wants LaGuardia re-elected," said the usually mild-mannered New York physician, former health commissioner. "LaGuardia and his band of Socialists, Communists and other radicals talk the President's own language. They have been with Mr. Roosevelt 100 per cent.

"If the President thought I would be a weak candidate against LaGuardia he would be for me. He would like to see a weak candidate oppose his protege but he knows the ticket I am heading will defeat LaGuardia. That is why he is taking a personal hand in the situation."

In asserting the President will "take reprisals" against Democratic court plan opponents, Copeland opened a closet in his office he said contained 100,000 letters from New York constituents asking him to vote against the President's court plan.

"That is conclusive evidence of how New York feels toward preserving the sanctity of our courts," said Copeland.

"My people want an independent judiciary. When I opposed the President, I fulfilled my obligation to my people."

Copeland said if the President makes another fireside chat and "carries out his plan to press again for dominance over the Supreme Court, he will make the greatest mistake of his life."

In his prepared statement, the New York Senator said the United States Government "is no longer Democratic, with a big 'D' or with a small 'd.'"

"Personal Dictatorship."

"It is largely personal, dictated by the White House," he said. "At least we have in the United States personal dictatorship if not political dictatorship."

Copeland followed his attack on the President with a denunciation of Flynn, charged Flynn's "various public salaries are hardly creditable to a man supposed to be the father of a political family," and facetiously asked: "As spokesman for the President, is he to get another salary? Is he to be one of those new secretaries with a 'passion for anonymity'?"

Copeland referred to Flynn as the "same so-called political leader who corrals the office of the Secretary of State of New York at $12,000 per year and the commissionership of the World's Fair at $10,000.

"Here he has a total of $22,000 income from appointive positions, and I have no personal knowledge of what service his law firm may be rendering public or semipublic institutions. Mr. Flynn is not a leader—he is a political cowboy, lassoing all the salaries for his own personal benefit. He is alleged to be successful in getting Federal patronage. I am wondering if he collected another job for himself while at Hyde Park yesterday."

Al Smith Under Fire.

New York, Aug. 9 (AP).—The New Deal candidate for the Democratic nomination for Mayor of New York charged former Gov. Alfred E. Smith with being a wrecker of his party today after the anti-New Deal candidate had flung the same charge at President Roosevelt.

Former State Supreme Court Justice Jeremiah T. Mahoney, the New Deal candidate, issued a statement in which he said the mayoralty campaign is "a battle" by Smith and the Liberty League "to turn Tammany Hall over to the Liberty League."

REG. U. S. PATENT OFFICE

By Scott Hart

Memorandum.

One of our most trusted agents was walking of a Sunday morning on the broad grounds of the zoo. He stuck a cigarette in his mouth, reached for a match, found none and asked for a light from a sad-faced citizen who was watching the antics of an animal. They admired the beast, between cigarette puffs, and learned through casual talk that each was employed at Interior.

The sad-faced man was apprehensive of a lay-off. But he said there might be hope and his fingers crept into a pocket and produced a paper. Our agent said that he read the paper and is willing to swear it was a memorandum from Secretary Ickes, calling upon one and all of his realm to bring to him personally any complaints. Briefs of complaint might be prepared and these—the memorandum (the alleged memorandum) insisted—would be given personal attention.

The agent says that never before and never since has he seen the memorandum; that he has asked sundry people in Interior about it and they profess ignorance of any such document. If such a memorandum exists he thinks it aboundingly to the credit of the Secretary. Anyhow . . .

* * * *

Silence.

Secretaries have much to do without hearing complaints. A lengthy manifesto recently was addressed to Secretary Wallace, painfully detailing the dismissal of Louis Matasoff, for alleged union activity. The reaction so far from the Secretary: silence.

* * * *

Seen on a magazine page: "The United States Forest Service and the Reclamation Service in general have been administrative and not political organizations. They do their work well and have deserved the respect and admiration of the country. The Postoffice Department, on the other hand, has been used by whatever party was in power as a political instrument to keep that party in control." And it might have been added that this sweet reputation is based almost entirely on the notorious postmastership appointments and has done much to obscure the magnificent work that the department does in handling the mails 365 days every year. It has a record of service such as no other department can boast. It's too bad the patronage plum hangs over it so notoriously.

Ambition.

An early ambition of Stanley W. Crosthwait, assistant to the commissioner of Indian Affairs, was to be an air pilot. He has accomplished it. Held a Commerce transport license several years and flies for pleasure now. He was formerly administrative assistant to the Assistant Secretary of Commerce in charge of aviation.

The most active publicity officer for any Government employe group—the gentleman (who prefers to be anonymous) from the Interior Department Recreation Association—asks us to defend him of the charge, elsewhere made, that he is "pesky." Undoubtedly, he says, people regarded Ivy Lee as "pesky," but Ivy brought in the results. All great doers, he affirms, have had to buzz around. And already this gentleman is fingering the fruits. People are stopping him on the halls of Interior and are saying: "Old boy, you're keeping us in the papers!" And for any publicity agent that's a laurel full of leaves, we'll say for you.

Meeting.

Herbert Blackman, president, Treasury Department Local, No. 11, U. F. W. A., says don't forget the lodge meeting at 8 o'clock this evening in the Thomson School, Twelfth and L streets northwest.

Now the latest from that busy publicity agent of the I. D. R. A.: Cecretary Ickes, in a note to Hillory A. Tolson, president, I. D. R. A., has accepted the office of honorary president of the organization. The Secretary expressed approval of the association's aims and said: "I know that such activity is of great advantage to the employes and the association has my best wishes for further progress."

Echo from Jacob Baker's radio address: "I emphasize that the officers and regulations of our union are provisional in order that you know certainly that as soon as an adequate representation of Government workers has been secured in the union, a constitutional convention will be called and Government workers themselves will have the opportunity to select their own officers and run their own organizations." Does this mean that the C. I. O. will relinquish some of its policy-forming hold on the U. F. W. A.?

Final plans in the "Quest for Talent" contest, being held at the Wardman Park Hotel: The grand finals will be held on the last Thursday in this month, with the last two auditions scheduled for Thursday of this week and the same day of next week. Departments to be represented this week are WPA, General Accounting Office, Agriculture, Internal Revenue, Treasury and War. Louis Pike, of the F. C. A., was the winner last week. He began an engagement at the hotel last night. With a program of impersonations, he won out over 20 contestants.

D. C. Plans Many Constitution Fetes

District citizens and societies will take a prominent part in the national celebration of the 150th anniversary of the signing and ratification of the Constitution, according to plans released yesterday.

Melvin C. Hazen, president of the District Board of Commissioners, said the District will hold numerous fetes and at least one big parade between September 17 and April 30, 1939. A series of pageants is under consideration.

CONTRACT BRIDGE

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

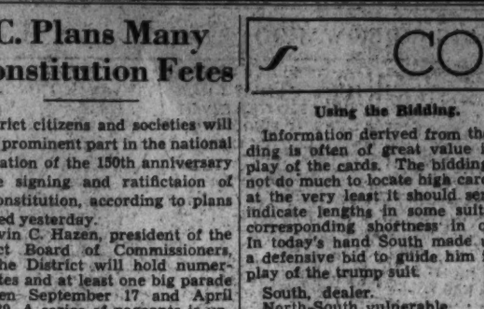
Using the Bidding.

Information derived from the bidding is often of great value in the play of the cards. The bidding may not do much to locate high cards but at the very least it should serve to indicate lengths in some suits and corresponding shortness in others. In today's hand South made use of a defensive bid to guide him in the play of the trump suit.

South, dealer.
North-South vulnerable.

West's pass to four spades is noteworthy. Despite his partner's bid, West did not feel that there was a great chance of slaughtering the four spade contract. His trump holding gave his side, he knew, an excellent chance to defeat the contract, but West wisely decided to increase that chance by refraining from warning South of the bad trump break.

The opening lead was the Jack of clubs, taken by dummy's Ace. Declarer saw that he could afford to lose two trump tricks and a diamond and, therefore, needed only to take precautions against the loss of three trump tricks. This would be possible only in the event that one player held all four trumps, and East's bid of four clubs made it extremely unlikely that he, in addition to great club length, could also have a four-card spade suit. Therefore South entered his own hand with the Ace of hearts, in order to lead the first trump.



The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	3 ♠	4 ♣
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

His precautions were rewarded when West played a low spade and East discarded a club, on dummy's Queen of spades. South's troubles were not yet over, however, since it was still extremely difficult to prevent West from making all three of his remaining trumps.

South returned to his own hand by means of his King of hearts, to take the diamond finesse. East won with the King of diamonds and returned a club. South ruffing. A low heart was led to dummy's Queen and the Ace of diamonds was cashed. South then trumped dummy's last heart and led the Jack of diamonds.

With all hands then down to three cards, South's were the King and a low trump and a diamond; West's were the A-J-10 of trump. South led his diamond and West was obliged to trump. He then had to permit South to make a trump trick with his King, for the success of the contract.
